South Wins Rate Parity On Freight To North

Tariffs on Many Articles Cut to Intra-North Levels; Eastman Dissents

By the Associated Press

In a 5-to-4 decision, the Interstate Commerce Commission upheld today the South's long-standing complaint against "discriminatory" freight rates, and ordered reductions in northbound rail charges on a list of manufactured articles.

Granting a plea of the Southern Governors' Conference, the commission in effect recognized the principle of establishing rate parity between shipments wholly within the North and those from the South to Northern points.

On a dozen commodities, the commission ordered rate reductions ranging from 5 to 35 per cent. On about as many others covered in the Southern complaint, it ordered no changes, pointing out there was no evidence that existing rates were unlawful.

Encourage Governors

It was generally believed that the Southern Governors' success in this case would encourage them to file proceedings seeking a general downward revision of South-North rates.

Two new members, Commissioners J. Haden Alldredge and William Patterson, did not participate in the decision.

Those supporting it were Commissioners Clyde B. Aitchison, William E. Lee, Marion M. Caskie, Walter M. W. Splawn and John L. Rogers. Against it were Chairman Joseph B. Eastman and Commissioners Claude R. Porter, Charles D. Mahaffie and Carroll Miller.

The majority held that the desirability of reasonably uniform rate structures was not open to serious question.

"When the important products of one producing section are subjected to a higher level of rates to such markets than are like products of adjacent competing producing sections less distance to such markets," said the order, "it generally cannot develop unless, and then only to the extent that, the differences in transportation charges can be offset by lower production costs or absorbed by a reduction in profits.

Tends to Retard Growth

"And even though differences in transportation charges can be thus offset or absorbed, this in itself generally tends to retard its growth and prosperity. In these circumstances, it is apparent that the relation of the rates may be of greater importance than their intrinsic level or measure. This is largely the situation here presented."

The carriers, defendants in the complaint, had contended that higher unit costs of transporting goods in the South provided justification for higher rates, but the commission majority said:

"It is a fair conclusion from the record as a whole, and we accordingly find, that the cost of transporting the articles named in the complaint from producing points in the South into the North, compared with that of transporting like articles within the North, does not justify the maintenance thereon of higher levels of rates than are ap-

Drivers Favor Light Speedup For Downtown

Use of Hand Signals By Police and Tardy Getaways Criticized

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

General speeding up of traffic on main thoroughfares leaving the downtown congested area is strongly favored by District motorists who wrote The Post in response to its "Horse and Buggy" series.

There were numerous suggestions that Fifteenth street, from K to Irving street northwest, be made one-way with a lengthened signal-light cycle during afternoon rush hours. Others proposed the same method be employed on Sixteenth, Thirteenth and Sixth streets.

It was the opinion of those who wrote to The Post that the traffic-flow on principal arteries to outlying sections must be more swiftly paced if downtown streets are to be relieved of peak-time vehicle jams

The fact that policemen are required to operate traffic lights by hand during rush hour periods, said one reader, is "an apparent admission by officials that our signal-timing system is not all it should be."

Cites Instances

He cited instances at major downtown and midtown intersections where policemen take over the control of traffic-light timing by switching off the normal system and operating the signals themselves.

"If our present method of handling traffic lights is adequate to move rush-hour traffic, them why must we resort to manual operation by policemen?" the writer asked.

Another reader blamed a large portion of rush-hour congestion on failure of motorists to "get away" promptly when signals change. Two or three cars which fail to move quickly on a green light hold up an

Mrs. Roosevelt Silent Auditor At Dies Inquiry

Youth Congress Representatives Deny Communist Ties

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

Under the benign eye of Mrs. Roosevelt, a representative of the American Youth Congress took the witness stand before the Dies Committee yesterday and read a resolution attacking the committee and demanding its immediate discontinuance.

Throughout the testimony, the First Lady sat quietly at the press table as a spectator. She did not offer to testify nor was she asked to do so by the committee—although she reiterated to reporters her willingness to answer questions "in the interest of truth."

The resolution, adopted by the congress sometime ago, was read by William W. Hinckley, former chairman of the organization. With him on the stand were Jack McMichael, present chairman, and Joseph Cadden, executive secretary.

Deny Communist Domination

All three vigorously denied their organization was Communist-dominated, as has repeatedly been alleged before the committee.

Their words had special significance because the trio had conferred with Mrs. Roosevelt until early yesterday on the train from New York, and later in the day they had lunched with her at the White House.

Declaring the Dies Committee has been "discredited . . . in the eyes of the young people of America," a statement Cadden released to the press, asserted "millions of young people are pressing their Congressmen to discontinue the Dies Committee by voting against any further appropriations."

In the statement was included the War Powers Of Daladier Extended

Vote of Confidence Granted by Chamber After Twelve Hours Of Stubborn Debate

By P. J. Philip
Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Nov. 30.—With characteristic French stubbornness, the Chamber of Deputies today came near to refusing to Premier Daladier and his cabinet the full powers they asked for the continuance of the war.

Premier Daladier, equally stubborn, stuck to his demand and won through with a majority of 309 to 189, and a final vote of 318 to 175.

Deputy after deputy declared that if it were not for the bad impression the change might have on the army, in the country and abroad, he would cast his vote with the opposition.

Daladier Lauded

Spokesmen paid tribute to the premier's direction of both the military and economic defense of the country, but they considered it their duty to maintain a controlling hand on all government action.

It took over 12 hours to conclude the debate and reach a vote.

In the morning before he tabled his demand for full powers the deputies paid full tribute to his leadership. Again and again they broke into applause and never more unanimously than when he declared:

"We will return blow for blow. Should the enemy's destructive fury fall upon our towns and villages we will strike hard on his soil also. This time we shall not be alone in suffering on our territory the misery and ruins of war."

Red Thrown Out

As Premier Daladier was delivering his speecch Communist Deputy Florimond Bonte, who had been in hiding since the order for his arrest with other Communists was issued, was ejected from the Chamber after he had taken his seat in his usual place.

Deputy Jean Chiappe, former prefect of police, interrupted the premier to ask for a suspension of the House, pointing to Bonte as the cause.

An uproar began, dominated by President Herriot's voice booming out, "M. Bonte, your presence here at such a time constitutes a scandal and I invite you to leave."

Bonte rose in his place and produced a sheaf of papers and began to try to make a speech. Two uniformed attendants pulled him from his seat and pushed him protesting out of the House.

His appearance had been carefully planned. He had driven swiftly into the court of the Parliament House on his arrival, and once inside the police were powerless to operate. Then, it appears, he attached himself to a group of Deputies and walked with them past the usher and into the assembly room. He was arrested upon his ejection.

Share of China Or War, Russia Hints to Japan

The Soviet Union has strengthened a string of air bases into China and is hinting at air attacks upon Japan proper next spring to force an agreement regarding zones of influence in China upon the Japanese government, according to diplomatic reports received in Washington. The reports also indicate that the Soviet attack on Finland will be followed, if successful, by a quick move to take over Rumanian Bessarabia.

Russian officials are said to have actually gone to the length of letting Japanese officials know that an air base has been established at an altitude of 10,000 feet at Hweiyuar in northern Sinkiang Province, and that Soviet fliers are being trained there in high altitude flight. The hint has been conveyed that if a Russo-Japanese pact on China proves impossible, these fliers may have to be used in attacks upon Japan proper next spring.

President Requests Immediate Reply To Note Asking Cities Be Spared by Planes

By William V. Nessly
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt early today appealed to Russia and Finland not to resort to the "inhuman barbarism" of dropping bombs on civilian populations.

After a day of grave conferences, while he and Secretary of State Hull watched the collapse of their repeated efforts to avert an outbreak of warfare in the Baltic region, the President addressed identical messages to the two governments on behalf of unfortified cities threatened with destruction.

In view of the comparative insignificance of the Finnish air force, which obviously constitutes no serious threat to Russian cities, observers interpreted the appeal as applying especially to the Moscow government.

Text of Messages

The President's messages said:

"The ruthless bombing from the air of civilians in unfortified centers of population during the course of hostilities which have raged in various quarters of the earth during the past few years, which has resulted in the maiming and in the death of thousands of defenseless men, women and children, has sickened the heart of every civilized man and woman and profoundly shocked the conscience of humanity.

"If resort is had to this form of inhuman barbarism during the period of the tragic conflagration with which the world is now confronted, hundreds of thousands of innocent human beings who are not even remotely participating in hostilities will lose their lives. I am therefore addressing this appeal to the (Soviet, Finnish) government as I have to governments which have been engaged in general hostilities, publicly to affirm its determination that its armed forces shall in no event, and under no circumstances, undertake the bombardment from the air of civilian populations or of unfortified cities, upon the understanding that these same rules of warfare will be scrupulously observed by all of their opponents. I request an immediate reply.

Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Earlier the President and Secretary Hull had conferred for an hour and a half, seeking to determine the course this country might take to lessen the severity of the new blow to world peace.

Amid much street talk of breaking off diplomatic relations with Russia, abrogation of the trade agreement with the Soviets, and application of the neutrality act's provisions, officials were grimly silent, insisting that insufficient official information

London, Nov. 30.—William Hughes, able-bodied seaman from South Shields, escaped injury when a German submarine shelled the Newport steamer Uskmouth for 2½ hours off the coast of Spain Saturday.

He managed to get away in a lifeboat when the Uskmouth burst into flames and sank and he arrived safely in England this afternoon with 21 of his mates.

But William Hughes was bored after tea this evening. He went out for a walk in the blackout, stepped off the seawall into deep water and was drowned.

Schoenfeld Moves Aides to Safety as Explosives Rain on Nearby Buildings

The State Department received a report last night that 15 Russian airplanes had raided Helsinki, Finland, in the immediate vicinity of the American Legation.

A report from H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, American Minister to Finland, said that some buildings were burning within three blocks of the legation.

Schoenfeld cabled that he had opened an emergency office at the Badgrankulla Hotel, not far from Helsinki.

Personnel of the American Legation is being evacuated to various places in the vicinity of the hotel, Schoenfeld reported.

No U. S. Casualties

The State Department said Schoenfeld would return to Helsinki tomorrow morning. It added that so far as the American Legation at Helsinki was aware there had been no American casualties in the Russian air raids.

State Department reports show that as of last January 1 there were 320 Americans in Finland and 400 Americans in Russia.

The Russian planes made an attack in the immediate vicinity of the American Legation about 3 p. m., Finnish time, yesterday.

Earlier in the day, Schoenfeld reported that he had delivered to the Finnish foreign office Secretary of State Hull's statement of Wednesday, offering the good offices of this country to solve the dispute between Russia and Finland.

Kremlin Snubbed Offer

The foreign minister, he reported, said the Finnish government would welcome the good offices, especially as it had no communication with Russia.

The American envoy was told by the foreign minister that no attack had been made from the Finnish side of the border, but that Russians had opened an artillery bombardment by land and sea near Terijoki and Kuokala district, as well as north of Lake Lagoda, where Russians crossed the frontier.

On the other hand, when Walter C. Thurston, charge d'affaires at the American Embassy in Moscow, delivered the Hull offer of good offices to the vice commissar for foreign affairs for Russsia, he was told that in the vice commissar's opinion there was no occasion for good offices.

First Bomber Lighted

Thurston reported that presumably the vice commissar would deliver the statement at once to higher officials.

The first word from Schoenfeld during the day was a report from him that at 9:20 a. m., Finnish time, one Soviet 2-motored plane passed over Helsinki at a low altitude. It was fired on by antiaircraft artillery and departed after 15 minutes. At 10:20 a. m., a flight of nine Soviet light bombers attacked fortresses in the Bay of Helsinki, were met by antiaircraft fire and retired.

Swedish Women Weep Over Helsinki Attack; Oslo Red Paper Stoned

By Wade Werner

Copenhagen, Nov. 30.—Sweden, Norway and Denmark officially maintained an attitude of neutrality tonight as they watched with foreboding Russia's war machine bring death and destruction to Finland.

All three countries were shocked by the invasion of Finland, but diplomats pointed out the Stockholm meeting of the Scandinavian sovereigns and Finnish President October 19 agreed on moral and economic collaboration but not military aid.

The Scandinavian governments avoided official comment. Feelings of the general public, however, were plain.

[Anti-Soviet feeling ran high in Oslo, where an angry crowd smashed windows in the Communist newspaper Varbeideren which had indorsed the Soviet moves against Finland.—Editor's note.]

Men and women crowded about Swedish newspaper offices expressing grief and indignation at the Russian invasion.

Women cried when they read that Helsinki had been bombed.

Government officials conferred in Stockholm, Oslo and Copenhagen. A foreign office spokesman in Sweden said his country was in a state of preparedness.

Many Danes felt the invasion was a personal blow.

In Oslo, students marched to the Finnish Legation to express their sympathy.

Helsinki (Friday), Dec. 1.—The Finnish government, its capital bombed and aflame, with the Soviet Russian army swarming across its frontier, resigned early today despite a unanimous vote of confidence in Parliament.

The cabinet, which for weeks had negotiated vaihly with Moscow on Russia's territorial demands on the little republic, stepped aside after a Moscow broadcast threatened annihilation of Helsinki unless an agreement was reached by 3 a. m. today (8 p. m. E. S. T. Thursday).

[The deadline of Soviet Russia's ultimatum passed without further aerial bombardment.—Editor's note.]

Although no announcement was made regarding a new government, it was believed a new cabinet would be formed before tonight.

Move For Truce Seen

[The resignation was seen in some circles as a move for an armistice. Reports were received in Copenhagen that Tanner probably would attempt to restore diplomatic relations with Moscow and would seek cessation of hostilities.

[The opinion prevailed in some diplomatic quarters that Russia might deal with a new Finnish government. It was recalled that Soviet Premier-Foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff Molotoff emphasized the resigned government's "attitude of irreconciliable hostility" yesterday in announcing severance of relations with Finland.]

The reason for the resignation, a government spokesman said, was a desire to bring into the government representatives of all parties.

[The Helsinki correspondent of the newspaper Berlingske Tidende said today that a new Finnish government was preparing a proposal to grain all of Russia's original demands, for territory and military bases, including a base on Hango

No Extra Funds for WPA Needed, Harrington Indicates

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Withholding of next year's relief estimates from the 1941 budget until "war boom" prospects have been thoroughly gauged was indicated yesterday by Col. F. C. Harrington, commissioner of work relief.

For the first time in WPA history, Harrington said the regular fiscal year appropriations will be made to "stretch" a full 12 months until July. Relief rolls, now climbing with a winter load, will be cut again in March to make the funds last, said the WPA chief.

He declined to verify reports of a sharply curtailed $1,100,000,000 relief estimate for next year and would suggest no budget figure. He said war trade increases and industrial activity has not yet relieved the relief load, but added:

"It would be reasonable to withhold relief estimates this year to give us an opportunity to see what this war boom is going to do."

WPA officials, he said, are "watching the whole industrial situation and its effect on employment."

R. A. F. Downs Mine-Laying German Plane in North Sea

By James B. Reston,

London, Nov. 30.—The air ministry tonight announced that British planes have overtaken a large German seaplane of the type used to drop mines in shipping lanes and machine-gunned it into the North Sea.

This was the twenty-fourth Nazi plane reported to have been shot down around the British Isles since the outbreak of war.

In order to guard against Nazi mine laying planes the Royal Air Force on North Sea patrol has been increased.

Yesterday, the ministry said, two of these new reconnaissance planes sighted the German mine-layer and riddled it with machine-gun bullets. The crew was picked up by a Norwegian boat.

Another German plane returned to the British naval base in the Firth of Forth today, but was driven off by R. A. F. fighters.

An official announcement today said that when Royal Air Force fighters raided the German seaplane base at Borkum, one of the Frisian Islands near the mouth of the River

WIT IN THE CAPITAL

When I came to Washington I felt I was entering the Parnassus of epigram, the native habitat of the mot juste. Every bigshot I'd talk with would sum up the situation for me in an aphorism worthy of Montaigne or Rochefoucauld. I'd saunter back to the office, and write it at leisure.

Harlan Miller

Here, I thought, were at least 1,000 lucid intelligences operating masterfully in an atmosphere of power and reason. Ah, when their tongues wag the fur will fly! Here the streets will be paved with wisecracks.

* * * *

Well, I was mistaken. This is the city of the 1,000-word epigram, the two-legged syllogism, where loquacity is the soul of wit and the humorist's loud laugh is often the first signal that he has just said something pungent.

* * * *

I have been disappointed before. Once Henrik Van Loon, out of the kindness of his big heart, took me (a yokel boy fresh from the prairies) to lunch with the literary wits at the Algonquin in New York. I cupped one hand behind each ear, listening like an airplane detector.

"—in a Washington salon?"

Alas, it was a foggy morning on Olympus. The Algonquin repartee dealt coolly with large appetites and poor digestions, with sartorial foibles and misdemeanors at poker. How witty we were, I reflected, when we were sophomores out in Iowa!

* * * *

Only two members of the Roosevelt regime have minted phrases that scored a touchdown in Bartlett's Familiar Quotations of 1938. One is Archibald MacLeish, the Librarian of Congress, who made it with gems to spare —as a poet.

* * * *

The other is President Roosevelt himself. He is represented by 11 fragments, ranging from "forgotten man," which is attributed to a Yale professor in a footnote, to "economic royalists" and "If they can take it, I can," about outdoor inaugurals in bad weather.

* * * *

Most of Roosevelt's pearls are really lofty sentiments too long for epigram. Two, I think, will live: "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself," and "We have always known that heedless self-interest was bad morals; we know now that is is bad economics."

* * * *

In all fairness, it must be recorded that many statesmen deem wit and epigram a little undignified.

If John Hamilton or Senator Barkley for example, were to think of an epigram while shaving, he would promptly dilute, insulate and sterilize it in a long speech, as soon as he could get to a stenographer.

He would take 3,000 words to say that the New Dealers remind him of saints slipping on banana peels.

"—epigrams can be dynamite"

Few of the present regime, or of the Loyal Opposition, for that matter, realize that they might save democracy and win elections more easily by repeating a 10-word epigram at one minute intervals over the radio than with one-hour speeches.

Much of the wit and humor in Washington is unconscious.

* * * *

But Napoleon realized the power of little wisecracks when he banished Madame de Stael from Paris. He felt her cocktail hour nifties were undermining him.

* * * *

And that reminds me that the ladies of the Capital are more lethally witty than the men. Their verbal darts go straight for the jugular.

It is no wonder that Alice Longworth's dicta about Harding and Roosevelt, though savagely inaccurate, are still quoted.

But my duties, alas, do not permit me much time for ambushing feminine wit.

* * * *

I have challenged several eminent New Deal wits (as well as some of the loyal opposition) to keep a careful record of all epigrams, memorable metaphors, aphorisms, mottoes and clever sayings uttered in their presence.

"We need a salon," they say, or "My colleagues are too serious."

Yes, too serious, and too transient and too uncertain for "the jewel five words long."

So I am pessimistic of results. But if the wit of the Capital takes a turn for the better I shall inform you promptly.

WHO'S BOSS? I hear Mrs. Roosevelt went to the depot to ask FDR's permission to attend the Dies' hearing. Also, I hear FDR phoned son Elliott not to attend the back-to-work meeting in Detroit. Elliott didn't.

The Gallup Poll

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 30.—Evidence that the symbol of business prosperity continues to be linked more with the Republican Party than with the Democratic Party in the minds of many voters today is revealed in a survey of public opinion just completed by the American Institute.

GEORGE GALLUP

The largest single group of voters polled in the study express the view that business conditions would be more prosperous if there were a Republican administration in Washington.

The linking of prosperity with Republicanism thus continues to be one of the strongest campaign appeals available to Republican strategists. The Republican National Committee has already been hammering away at it, for its weekly clipsheets sent to newspapers constantly repeat the slogan: "For the job vote G.O.P."

However, the Institute's study also shows that the upturn in business during the past few months has caused some change of sentiment on the issue, for fewer voters now think the Republicans would bring prosperity than thought so last June.

In today's survey, and in a similar study last June, the following issue was put to a cross-section of voters in every state:

"Do you think business would be more prosperous, or less prosperous, if we had a Republican President in the White House?"

The comparative results follow:

	Today	June
More Prosperous	41%	50%
Less Prosperous	27	26
Would Make No Difference	32	24

The replies to the question, the study found, vary sharply according to the political party preference of the individual. Thus, Republicans are overwhelmingly convinced that business would be better under a President of their own party, while a substantial number of Democrats think it would be worse.

When the vote by parties in the survey today is compared to the vote last June, a number of interesting facts appear.

There has been relatively little change of opinion among the rank and file of Republican voters. Among Democrats, on the other hand, sentiment has changed considerably since last summer.

Fewer Democrats are willing to admit that business would be any more prosperous under a Republican, but many more now take the point of view that the election of a Republican administration would make no difference in business conditions. Last summer only about one-fourth of the Democrats thought this; today as many as 40 per cent feel that business prosperity is not dependent upon their party or its fate at the polls.

The vote among the rank and file of the two parties follows:

Today	Republicans	Democrats
More Prosperous	79%	10%
Less Prosperous	2	50
No Difference	19	40

Last June	Republicans	Democrats
More Prosperous	85%	29%
Less Prosperous	3	42
No Difference	12	29

The voters who think business would be better under the Republicans advance two chief arguments. The first is that "business would be more willing to cooperate" with a Republican administration. The second is that "times have always been better under the Republicans."

The chief arguments of those who think business would be worse under the Republicans is that the G. O. P. is less concerned with the "welfare of the laboring man," and would "destroy the accomplishments of the New Deal."

Copyright Protection Asked for Latin-American Literature

Latin-American novels could be sold profitably in the United States if copyrights could be legally secured against pirating, John G. Paine, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, asserted yesterday.

"To exploit the big United States market for Latin-American publications, we must have assured copyrights," he told the Conference on Inter-American Relations in the Field of Publications and Libraries.

Paine said, "what we need to do is to send examples of our culture to Latin America and get the Latin Americans to send us representative achievements of their culture."

There is little need at the moment, he added, for organizing knowledge about cultures of the Western Hemisphere.

"All the bibliographies in the world," he stated, "won't make the peoples of the New World understand each other, but wide acquaintanceship with cultural achievements may achieve that objective."

A special committee on books and publications urged the conference to go on record favoring reductions in the postage for books sent to Latin America. Lower cost for books marketed south of the Mexican border also was asked by the committee.

"A reduction in the price of books, particularly in the more general fields, is absolutely essential to obtaining wider markets," the group asserted. "Publishers must offer their books at lower prices than in the United States market . . . to stimulate sales in Latin America."

Every book published in Latin America or in the United States for the Latin market should be "made available promptly in at least one library" of this country, the committee on libraries reported.

Exchanges of librarians and library science students as well as publications should be encouraged, the group concluded.

Cassini Blame Taken by Ian Montgomery

Brother Colin and Alexander Calvert Deny Part in Assault

By the Associated Press

Warrenton, Va., Nov. 30.—Ian Montgomery, Warrenton businessman, shouldered all responsibility in Fauquier County Circuit Court today for the "tarring and feathering" of Count Igor Cassini, Washington newspaper columnist, June 25.

Montgomery, his 28-year-old brother, Colin, and Alexander Calvert, 21, went on trial today on charges of constituting a mob and committing assault upon the writer, son of Countess Marguerite Cassini. The three defendants are prominent in the social life of northern Virginia.

Colin Montgomery and Calvert corroborated Ian Montgomery's testimony that they accompanied him at his request on an auto ride into the country early on June 25 but took no active part in pouring oil over Cassini's nude body. Ian Montgomery said a few feathers were added, but that Cassini, grandson of a former Russian ambassador, was not harmed.

Judge J. R. H. Alexander recessed court after the defense had concluded until 10 a. m. tomorrow when arguments will be heard and the case sent to the jury.

If convicted, the defendants may be found guilty either of a misdemeanor carrying the penalty of a fine up to $500 or 12 months in jail or both, or a felony carrying a penalty of one to ten years in prison.

Ian Montgomery testified he objected to items carried in Cassini's column in the Washington Times-Herald. He claimed these items ridiculed his parents.

"My motive," he said, "was to find the source of this information about my family and friends and to get him (Cassini) out of this country once and for all."

"Did any of these others assist you?" Defense Attorney Aubrey Weaver asked him.

"Not except to ride along in my car," Ian replied.

He denied the testimony given by Cassini earlier today of being "choked" until nearly unconscious and roughly handled as he was bustled into Montgomery's car at the Warrenton Country Club after being summoned from the ballroom by a message his car had been bumped. Cassini also had said he was threatened with emasculation.

Cassini's mother and his brother, Oleg, and Miss Austine McDonnell, Warrenton girl whom he had escorted to the dance on the night of the affair, were front-row spectators.

Weaver said the occurrence was nothing more than "what any red-blooded Virginian would have done to protect themselves from the distinguished Russian count."

Richard Mansfield, general accountant of Washington, who testified he was a stranger to the Montgomerys, Calvert and Cassini, and Donald Morton, of Baltimore, a friend of Colin Montgomery, both testified they went along in the car but did not know what was going to happen and had no part in the affair.

84-Day Syphilis Cure by Ray Revealed Before 200 Here

Treatment of syphilis by radiotherapy may bring cures within as little as twelve weeks, where drug treatment alone would require as many months or be powerless to cure, according to S. F. Culver, of the General Electric X-ray Corporation.

Culver addressed about 200 persons yesterday in the Commerce Department auditorium under the sponsorship of the Patent Office education committee. The length of time required for treatment by old-fashioned methods and the expense involved has been one of the most serious obstacles to dealing with the disease, he said, since it discouraged people from undergoing treatment or forced them to discontinue treatment before it was complete.

"To begin treatment and then stop is even more dangerous than to let the disease go untreated in many cases," he said. Describing case histories of cures that made medical history, he said the State of Michigan has saved more than $60,000 in 20 months through the speedy cure of syphilitics in "a certain big prison" by radio-therapy.

The principle of electro-magnetic induction is used in the treatment to raise the body temperature to 107 degrees Fahrenheit for several hours at a time, without endangering the patient or causing any suffering, he said.

New Arson Attempt Spurs Hunt for Capital Pyromaniac

Efforts to apprehend the firebug who last Sunday fired seven apartment houses in the Mount Pleasant section were redoubled yesterday when evidence of his eighth foray was revealed to police.

Miss Margaret Gowans, of 1837 Mintwood place northwest, notified authorities that a fire had been built under her front porch against a wooden door. The fire caused little damage, she said.

Ashes of paper and leaves were found piled against the door, Miss Gowans said, by her maid, Pearl Buchanan, of 1513 Eighth street northwest, who went into the areaway yesterday to sweep. No flames were alive, and Miss Gowans told detectives the fire could have been set anytime since Monday and died before it gained headway.

Possibility that the fire was accidental was dismissed by investigators when they learned from Miss Gowans that the areaway was swept clean of debris on Monday.

The house has been occupied either by herself or her sister since Sunday, she declared, and added that they did not notice any smoke.

Last Sunday night firemen were called to seven fires in large buildings in the Kalorama and Belmont roads sections. Three firemen and a woman were hurt and more than 200 persons were forced from their homes by flames and smoke originating in basement trash piles. In each instance fire marshals discovered evidence of incendiarism.

Police took into custody seven persons, including one who was seen to leave one of the buildings before fire was discovered, but have released them all. They are still searching for a "tall, thin man."

Wednesday, Detective Chief Bernard W. Thompson, who appointed a special squad of detectives to aid fire department officials in the apprehension of the firebug, offered a $100 reward for information leading to the man's arrest.

Fall of Nanning Strikes at U. S. Wood Oil Imports

Copyright by New York Times

Chungking, China, Nov. 30.—One of the most serious results of the loss of Nanning is the interference with the export of wood oil. Practically the entire production for the next few years must be sent to the United States to retire the $25,000,000 credit granted to China last year.

It is believed here that the major Japanese aim in striking at Nanning at this time was to halt this transport at its height.

Mrs. Roosevelt Silent Auditor At Dies Inquiry

Youth Congress resolution specifically asking that "the Dies Committee be discontinued immediately" and that support be given the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee.

Eclipsing in interest both committee and witnesses was Mrs. Roosevelt, whose presence electrified the audience, attracted scores of spectators and was responsible for three moving-picture cameras being set up in the hearing room in the Old House Office Building.

Anxious to be on hand when the Youth Congress witnesses were called, Mrs. Roosevelt first appeared at the morning session. But another witness, William Nowell, colored former Communist from Detroit, held the stand all morning.

At the luncheon recess, photographers flocked about Mrs. Roosevelt and Representative Starnes (Democrat), Alabama, chairman of the three-man sub-committee conducting the hearings. While flashlight bulbs were popping, Mrs. Roosevelt observed to Starnes that she was "disappointed" in the testimony, as she had heard "nothing new."

Asked by a reporter if she had come to give "moral support" to the Youth Congress, Mrs. Roosevelt smiled and softly replied, "They don't need moral support."

Mrs. Roosevelt invited seven of the youth representatives to have lunch with her.

At lunch were Hinckley and his wife; McMichael; Cadden; Frances Williams, administrative secretary of the American Youth Congress; Vivian Liebmann, public relations director of the A. Y. C., and Joseph P. Lash, national secretary of the American Student Union, which has also been accused of Communist domination.

Declines Committee Seat

The First Lady did not reappear at the hearing room until mid-afternoon, but she was in time to hear all the Youth Congress testimony, which will be continued today.

Starnes invited her to sit with the committee, but she declined, pointing out that "I've just come to listen—I don't want to disturb you."

Only once did Mrs. Roosevelt's feelings get the better of her. Querying Hinckley about the charge of communism in the Youth Congress, Starnes suggested that the organization had "refused" to condemn communism at the time it denounced fascism.

As Cadden shot back an emphatic "no," Mrs. Roosevelt let slip a "no" in audible tones.

Unnoticed among the spectators sat Tom Mooney, recently pardoned from a life sentence he received for alleged participation in the Preparedness Day bombing in San Francisco in 1916. Mooney said at the close of yesterday's hearings that he thought the Dies Committee constituted a "disgraceful spectacle."

Accused of Misusing Power

The resolution which Hinckley read to the committee accused it of "attempts to discredit trade unions," "misuse of Congressional power," "acceptance of hearsay, slander and surmise," and "provoking a war hysteria with witch-hunting methods."

Starnes heatedly retorted that the resolution was based on "misinformation" and that the committee is making "no wild charges." In answer to McMichael's protest that Youth Congress representatives had asked to be heard 15 months ago, Starnes observed that he called the witnesses as soon as he was in a position to do so.

In his testimony earlier in the day, Nowell told the committee that Communist policy was to establish a colored republic in the South, but such an attempt, he said, could lead only to "race riots, victimization of the colored people of the South, and chaos."

The hearings yesterday were opened by Dr. Leon P. Smith, dean of students at the University of Chicago, who said the American Student Union (a member of the American Youth Congress) and the Communist Club are engaged in un-American and subversive activities on the Chicago campus.

He said he thought the student union "indirectly controlled" by the Communist Party, although its members do not actually belong to the party.

U. S. Officials Study Ways to Help Finland

Roosevelt and Hull Confer at Length on Hearing of Invasion

had been received to justify any decisions.

Official News Awaited

Congressional comment was marked by bitterness toward the Soviets, including such phrases as "the bloody hand of Stalin," "Russian brute force" and "deceptive practices."

Generally, it was recognized that any of the steps open to this country could be expected to have little material effect on Russia, and likely would be greeted with derision from Moscow. Nevertheless, Secretary Hull made it clear that whatever steps were called for would be taken. He told his press conference that the law would be followed, though insisting in response to all questions that he was waiting for official information to show exactly what was transpiring in the Baltic area.

Finnish Minister Hjalmar Procope conferred with President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull at the White House and gave them the latest detailed information he had just received by telephone from his government.

"A Ruthless Attack"

With visible emotion he declared as he left the White House:

"What now is going on is no war, it is a ruthless attack on a peaceful nation."

The minister said he had been told from Helsinki that the morale of the people was good, despite the havoc wrought by the invasion.

"Finland has not declared war on Russia," he said, but only a state of seige. Fanland from the first has tried to maintain normal and friendly relations with Russia, and in the present conflict also tried to find a peaceful solution.

"All talk of frontier incidents provoked by the Finns are false," he declared.

Contributing to a general feeling of futility here, so far as Finland's position is concerned, were reports that that tiny republic has only some 150 military airplanes with which to oppose more than 7,000 Russian fighting aircraft.

King Asks Severance of Ties

As shocked surprise and anger mingled in comment on the Russian attack, Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, declared:

"I hope my country will not longer grasp the bloody hands of Stalin."

Terming Russia "a brutal, semi-barbarous land governed by tyrants and those who seek the destruction of democratic government," he urged that Congress go on record for severance of diplomatic relations with Moscow, a step open only to the President.

His statements followed similar ones by Senator Pittman, of Nevada, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, assailing "deceptive practices recently invented by totalitarian governments in creating incidents, insignificant in reality, accompanied by inflaming of popular sentiment for war as a prelude to and an excuse for conquest."

Congress Leaders Ready

President Roosevelt plunged into discussion of the new international crisis as soon as he arrived here early yesterday from his Thanksgiving vacation at Warm Spring, Ga. Secretary Hull met him at the train.

Congressional leaders were in readiness to answer any summons to the White House, in view of Mr. Roosevelt's assertion during the special session of Congress that he would confer with them in case of critical foreign developments.

There was widespread belief last night that Mr. Roosevelt would refrain for the time being from invoking the neutrality act, which would forbid American ships to visit Finland or Russia, and would deny those countries credit here. Invoking the act might also involve adding to the combat zone, already decreed in the German-British-French war, from which American ships and travelers would be barred.

Germans Say War Aim Is to Break British Power

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Nov. 30.—The German war goal is a Europe free of England. This is the opinion expressed in the press today and in the Wilhelmstrasse.

In Czecho-Slovakia and Poland the Germans found evidence of the same disturbing English factor, it is alleged. The recent visit of Lord Lloyd, of Dolebran, to the Balkans, it was stated in the Wilhelmstrasse, was evidence that this British system is endeavoring to excite European countries against any one continental power with which the English find thmeselves in difficulties.

Therefore, the German war goal, this opinion holds, is directed exclusively against England, and the Reich is furthermore fighting the war in the interests of all Europe.

The action of Lord Lothian, British Ambassador to Washington, in giving an original text of the Magna Carta to the Library of Congress for safekeeping, in the view of the Boersen Zeitung, is symbolic of what Britain is doing with her position "as a capitalistic, international trading nation."

Finn Cabinet Quits, Truce Move Foreseen

Yield by Morning Or Helsinki Will Be Razed, Say Reds

Peninsula, a United Press dispatch from Copenhagen stated.—Editor's note.]

Word of the government's resignation, which came less than 24 hours after the first Red troops crossed the border, was forwarded to Moscow by a representative of the American Legation. It was expected the American Embassy would communicate it to the Kremlin.

Before the cabinet resigned, Russia's troops were marching into Finland at points along the 800-mile frontier from the Isthmus of Karelia, near Leningrad, to Finland's narrow corridor on the Arctic Ocean, 200 miles above the Arctic Circle.

The Russian air force bombed Helsinki, setting fire to buildings in the southwestern section of the capital. Newspapers here estimated the dead at between 100 and 200.

[After the extraordinary session of Parliament last night, the Finnish cabinet decided tentatively to move the seat of government to Nikolian Kaapunki (Vaasa), a western Finnish port on the Gulf of Bothnia, it was stated in advices received in Copenhagen.]

A Finnish defense ministry broadcast heard in London said Russian troops "were all repulsed this afternoon. There was lively artillery fire on the border and two Russian tanks were destroyed."

Reds Claim 10-Mile Gain

[Another broadcast heard in London from Moscow announced the beginning of hostilities against Finland and said the Soviets began to march after three new border incidents Thursday morning.]

[The Soviet government announced early today (Friday), that its Red army legions had advanced 10 to 15 kilometers (6 to 10 miles), into Finland. The announcement, distributed by Tass, official news agency, declared that Russia had hurled her military might against the neighboring republic only after "new armed provocations" by Finnish border forces.

[As a result of these reported border violations, the announcement said Russian forces crossed the frontier at 8 a. m., yesterday (midnight, E. S. T. Wednesday), on the Karelian Isthmus and a number of other points.]

The Red fleet steamed westward in the Gulf of Finland and seized the Finnish island of Seiskari and began shelling Vilpuri (Viborg), and other coastal cities and towns.

Viipuri, a city of 75,000 population, was, like Helsinki, set afire by repeated bombing attacks from the air.

The Russian air fleet made its first appearance over the capital at 8:20 a. m. (2:20 a. m. E. S. T.), and returned several times during the day. The attacks began on Malm Airport on the outskirts but spread to the city proper.

By nightfall the sky over southwestern Helsinki was red with the glow of burning buildings. Several apartment houses and the Helsinki Institute of Technology were blasted apart.

Several bodies were recovered in the streets. The toll of dead and wounded could not be determined immediately.

(The Danish radio broadcast a Finnish news agency report that 200 persons had been killed in a raid at 7 p. m. (noon, E. S. T.).

While Russian bombing planes attacked Helsinki, Viipuri and the industrial city of Ensoe, where a hospital was struck, infantry forces pushed into Finland behind barrages of heavy artillery fire.

On the Isthmus of Karelia, where the frontier is about 15 miles north of Leningrad, Russian troops advanced along the entire 40-mile width of the isthmus from the Gulf of Finland to Lake Ladoga.

About 200 miles to the north, above Lake Ladoga, they cut off Suojaervi, in a strategic section of the border.

About 600 miles still farther north, at the extreme tip of Finland on her narrow corridor to the Arctic Ocean west of Murmansk, Russia, the Soviet troops cut off the so-called Fishermen's Peninsula near the Finnish harbor of Petsamo.

A Norwegian dispatch said bombing planes took part in this advance, partly destroying several Finnish towns in this section and carrying the air attack to the Norwegian border.

After the first air raid on Helsinki the attacking planes dropped handbills printed in Finnish saying:

"You know we have food. You know we have bread. Why hunger?"

After the first thunder of bursting bombs died away, this correspondent heard as the next sound a chorus of singing. It was from soldiers marching in the capital's streets.

All barracks plunged into immediate defense activity. Civilians were calm as they appeared in the streets with gas masks over their shoulders.

"The War Is On"

Soon after the first bombing of Helsinki a foreign office spokesman told newspapermen:

"It has started; the war is on."

Bombs spoke after that.

Petsamo and Liinahamari, leading towns of the corridor, were partially razed.

Machine-gun attacks were made on an omnibus running mail between Petsamo and Enare, on another bus near Nautsi, almost on the Norwegian border, on three automobiles with passengers near Petsamo, and on several taxicabs further south on the highway.

The Red navy blockaded the Petsamo Fjord.

The invasion terminated abruptly on an exchange of notes between the two countries over "border incidents" Moscow had reported.

President Kyoesti Kallio issued a decree "for defense and for maintenance of law and order in the Finnish republic, (the President) hereby declared a state of war."

Foreign Minister Eljas Erko, terming the attack "the purest aggression imaginable," said "we have no other way now than to try to defend ourselves with all the means at our disposal."

"As for the reason for the attack," Erko said, "the pretext was used that we invaded Russian territory and our troops threatened Leningrad. We haven't done anything of the kind."

Antiaircraft batteries fought back at the invading planes and ten were reported to have been shot down by nightfall, two of them in the capital.

The government urged residents to leave the city.

Tonight the capital was blacked out, but blazing buildings provided a beacon for possible enemy attackers.

Meanwhile buses were running on full schedule. One train was scheduled to leave with people hoping to reach Stockholm.

All gas mains in Helsinki were shut off as a precaution against fire.

Balkans Next on Soviet List, Italy Fears

By Herbert L. Matthews.

Copyright by New York Times.

Rome, Nov. 30.—The Russian invasion of Finland has deeply shocked the Italian people. Officially, however, no cognizance is being taken of the move.

What worries the Italians more than anything was best expressed by Guido Gonella in tonight's Osservatore Romano. In this case, he was speaking not only for the Vatican but for all Italians.

"The essentially important thing to keep in mind," he writes, "is that the present Soviet military threat is not merely a threat against the independence of one country but a threat of the further progress of Communism in Europe. On the fate of Finland hangs in large measure the fate of all northern Europe."

In other words, the advance of Communism means that sooner or later the Balkans are going to become involved, and that is something which Italy cannot permit and still maintain her national security.

British Decry War on Finns But Cannot Aid

Parliament Cheers as Chamberlain Condemns 'Unjustified Attack'

By Robert Bunnelle,
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Nov. 30.—Parliament resounded today with condemnations of Soviet Russia's invasion of Finland but the indications were that Britain, preoccupied with her own war against Germany, could do nothing to help the little Baltic republic.

Prime Minister Chamberlain told a sympathetic House of Commons that the government regarded as unjustified "this fresh attack on a small, inependent nation which must result in fresh suffering and loss."

Authoritative sources said, however, that Britain had no obligation to help Finland.

Britain, Chamberlain asserted, "found it difficult to believe that strategical measures of such scope and importance as were suggested should have been considered necessary to protect the Soviet Union against a country as small as Finland."

British Steamer Sunk

Members of Parliament cheered, indicating strong sympathy with Finland.

The Finnish minister to London called the invasion "a straightforward case of aggression."

The British press headlined the Soviet-Finnish war above their own conflict in which Britain suffered another loss at sea with the sinking of the 2,730-ton steamer Sheaf Crest by a mine off the southeastern coast. Twenty-nine survivors, many of them injured, were rescued.

In air warfare, two British planes downed a German Dornier seaplane over the North Sea yesterday, the air ministry announced, while today a German plane was engaged by two British fighters north of the Firth of Forth but the German ship escaped.

U. S. Gesture Welcomed

Chamberlain told the House the government welcomed warmly the United States' willingness to lend her good offices in settling the Russian-Finnish dispute.

Liberal leaders in Parliament today urged Great Britain expand her world trade at all costs, outbidding and underselling Germany. Britain's blockade will be extended to German exports Monday.

[Tokyo dispatches said Japanese Foreign Minister Kichisaburo Nomura had advised British Ambassador Sir Robert Leslie Craigie of his government's determination to refuse to recognize the export blockade. Sir Robert was said to have assured the foreign minister Britain would exercise care to prevent damage to neutrals.]

One economic specialist said Germany now has access to the resources of the entire European continent east of France, as well as much of Asia.

The London Times, which frequently reflects the government's attitude, called for a drive to promote British exports and "where necessary, facilitate barter transactions."

Russian Attack Again Creates Eastern Front

By G. H. Archambault.
Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Nov. 30.—With the Soviet aggression against Finland there is again an eastern front. The development is so pregnant with possibilities that it may well mark the turning point.

It is realized that Finland's gravest inferiority is in the air—probably much more than tenfold. The country's natural defenses, in the form of innumerable lakes and forests, are calculated to complicate its assailant's task. But resistance remains a forlorn hope.

The recurring question today is: What new military combinations may develop, and what new fronts?

On the Western Front in the last 24 hours it has been the old story—bad weather, intermittent shelling and much patrolling.

On the outskirts of the Haardt Forest the French ambushed an enemy party which lost four prisoners.

Artillery fire occurred in the sector near the Moselle River where German working parties were harassed while strengthening their positions.

Today's French communiques follow:

"No. 175, morning. There is nothing to report."

"No. 176, evening. There was the customary activity on the part of our patrols.

"One of our torpedo boats successfully attacked an enemy submarine."

Official Germany Pleads Ignorance of War on Finns

By Louis P. Lochner,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Nov. 30.—The Nazi regime in Germany is "sympathetic to Russia," authorized German sources said today in comment on reports that Russia was invading Finland.

However, the official attitude as late as 5 p. m. (11 a. m. E. S. T.) was that Germany did not know that a state of war existed between Finland and Russia.

There was not even confirmation of the Russian bombing of Helsinki, it was stated. The telephone connection with Finland was cut off and the Russian government had not advised Germany, it was said.

Previously authorized German sources had said the Nazi regime had an "understanding of Russia's desire to protect Leningrad," which lies close to the Finnish border.

Official Germany also did not know whether a reported Italian radio comment allegedly branding Russia's action as aggression represented the official Italian view.

Authorized sources defined German war aims at present as liberation of the European continent from English intereference. The condition must cease, it was said, which enables Britain to have a finger in every "continental pie."

The view was that Europe can come to a peaceful rest only if the possibility of British interference is rendered impossible.

French Air Chief Thanks U. S. for Aid

Paris, Nov. 30.—Aviation Minister Guy Lachambre, addressing the American Club today, paid tribute to the aid France and Great Britain have obtained from American aviation production, and said the Allies soon would have superiority in the air.

Lachambre said that France had allowed her industry and national activity to be turned toward peaceful pursuits, and last year found her unprepared.

Procope Fifth Envoy to Face Loss of Nation

Finnish Minister Keeps All-Night Vigil As Russians Attack

By Edward T. Folliard

For the fifth time in less than two years, a member of Washington's diplomatic corps yesterday found himself in danger of becoming a man without a country.

This time it was Hjalmar Johan Procope, Minister from Finland, a tall, square shouldered man of 50, who in the course of an all-night vigil at his legation, 2416 Tracy place northwest, learned that the troops, ships and warplanes of Russia finally had launched an assault against the Finnish Republic.

Twice Minister Procope put in telephone calls for Helsinki. The second time he got the portentous news: Red army planes were bombing the Finnish capital.

Procope, one of the energetic builders of the 21-year-old republic, had predicted only last Tuesday that the Finns would fight rather than sacrifice their independence to a voracious Russia. When Russia struck, he denounced the Soviet leaders as "liars."

Now he was going through the same experience that has befallen four other diplomats here, beginning on March 12, 1938, when Edgar Prochnik, Minister from Austria, found that his country had been snatched by Adolf Hitler. He has since become an American citizen and is now teaching at Georgetown University.

Hurban Was Next

Last March Hitler's shadow fell across the mansion next door, the legation of Czecho-Slovakia.

However, Col. Vladimir Hurban, the Czecho-Slovak Minister, refused to surrender the legation to the German Embassy here, and he still is recognized by the United States Government.

Mussolini was the next aggressor, and his victim here was Faik Konitza, Minister of Albania. Since Konitza maintained his legation in the Mayflower Hotel, there was nothing for the Italians to claim in Washington.

Then, on September 1, came Hitler's invasion of Poland, backed up later by Stalin's push from the East, which left Count Jerzy Potocki an Ambassador without a country.

As in the case of Czecho-Slovakia, however, the United States has refused to recognize that aggression.

That the United States will refuse to recognize any claims Russia makes on Finland was taken for granted.

Minister Procope, after a sleepless night, spent yesterday dashing from the vine-covered legation to the State Department.

"Situation Speaks for Itself"

"The situation speaks for itself," he said. "The behavior of Russia speaks for itself.

"Earlier reported incidents in which the Finns were said to be involved have been proved lies—lies from the Russian side."

Telegraph messenger boys were delivering messages of admiration and sympathy at the legation throughout the day. These reflected the country's affection for the spic and span republic, the homeland of Paavo Nurmi, the wonder runner; of Jan Sibelius, the great composer, and of a proud people who pay their debts.

The Ministers of Denmark, Sweden and Norway called at the legation to "express sympathy."

Denies Finland Has Declared War

Swedes Fear Russia Will Attack Them

Sweden will fight if Russia attempts to seize an ice-free port on Norway's western sea coast, it was reported here last night.

In Washington diplomatic circles, now engaged in a feverish effort to anticipate the next Russian move, the Soviet invasion of Finland was interpreted yesterday as the prelude to a drive toward the rich iron mines of north Sweden and ice-free Norwegian harbors.

Anxious Scandinavian envoys were reserved in official comment. Swedish Minister Bostrom said, "We are very worried about the situation." A telephone conversation last night with Stockholm indicated outward calm in the Swedish capital and no new mobilization measures, it was stated at the legation. "That does not mean we are not greatly concerned," the minister added.

The Swedish navy and air force are already mobilized, it was pointed out here, and the army has been brought well above peace-time strength.

Officials of the Norwegian legation refused to comment on the Russo-Finnish war. The legation has received no information of the reported Soviet demand for three Norwegian ports within the Arctic Circle, an attache said.

In other well-informed quarters here, however, it was believed that the Russian attack on Finland may convert the watch and wait war between Germany, France and Britain into a struggle of continental dimensions.

One diplomat with extensive experience in the U. S. S. R., as well as the Scandinavian countries, said Sweden and Norway would go immediately to Finland's aid except for the fear that Hitler would then strike from the south.

They may back up Finland despite the Nazi menace, he suggested, counting on British naval, air and economic support in the event of a German attack. This support "would tie up the two European wars into one," he said.

Another observer in the diplomatic corps, pointing out that the bulk of Germany's vital ore imports come from the Swedish iron mines, predicted that war between Russia and Sweden would prove "the acid test" of the new found Russo-German friendship.

British Tighten Trade Ties to Spain and Italy

Commons Hears Plan To Cement Balkan Amity With Funds

By Raymond Daniell

Copyright by New York Times

London, Nov. 30.—Britain's colonial policy was defended and her relations with neutral countries were discussed today in a debate in the House of Commons.

Richard A. Butler, under-secretary for foreign affairs, added his contribution to the definition of British peace aims by declaring it was sought to replace the "uncertainty" of pre-war days with the "certainty" that liberties, ideals and traditions would continue.

Hugh Dalton, opposition Labor member, expressed the hope that "the cold hand of the treasury" would not be laid on any necessary schemes for cementing friendships with nations of south and southeast Europe. He urged that the government refrain from any plan for restoring the Hapsburg dynasty in Austria, adding that it was important that nothing be done to discourage the "stirrings" within Germany which one day might destroy the "accursed Nazi system."

Butler assured the House that in the Mediterranean "our relations with Italy are friendly," although in wartime difficulties are bound to arise. The government is doing its best to see that the "legitimate interests of Italy are as little interfered with and prejudiced as possible." It was hoped, he said, that an economic joint committee would be set up with Italy to function in Rome.

Another trade delegation, Butler said, had left for Spain and similar trade discussions were going on with Turkey, he said, expressing the hope that the negotiations would remove any existing barriers to trade.

Consideration has been given to plans for developing and improving trade with the countries of southeastern Europe, too, the undersecretary said, adding that the recent reduction in the Bulgarian and Turkish forces was satisfying.

Butler disclosed a government plan for buying up the Egyptian cotton crop if the price were forced below a certain level by the cutting off of the German market.

In connection with Allied peace aims, he said:

"If it is possible to sum up what we are fighting for, it is to say that we are defending our way of living, based on the dignity of the individual and the continuance of family life. That means, in fact, that we are fighting to preserve all that is left in Christian civilization."

WPA Studies Training Men To Vocations Where Jobs Wait

A vocational reorientation program for District PWA workers and others who cannot afford private training for available jobs is being studied by local and Federal officials, Paul Edwards, District WPA director, disclosed yesterday.

Edwards, addressing the family service committee of the Council of Social Agencies, said that the work being done now to equip unskilled and unemployed persons for available skilled jobs is inadequate, and declared:

"I would like to develop an educational program which would provide greater opportunity than now exists for the development of new skills . . . This training program can be launched in a modest way with the facilities available."

Edwards said that despite the large numbers of unemployed in Washington, the United States Employment Service had been unable to find enough men and women to fill certain jobs.

First step in the training program, Edwards said, would be a spot survey of the 10,000 active WPA workers in the District, and 6,000 others who have received certification for jobs that are not available. Officials would seek to determine the unemployment facts for every twentieth person on the WPA roles.

While the survey is still in the "tentative" stage, Edwards said he was planning to confer immediately with Federal officials on its feasibility. If approved the survey would take about two weeks.

With his outline of the training program, Edwards issued a warning against terminating WPA activities on the expectation that a war boom will wipe out unemployment.

The Committee for Better Homes for Toys Holds a Press Conference with

SANTA CLAUS

AT THE EMERALD CITY IN THE MERRY OLD

Land of Oz

"H-R-RUMPH," said Santa fixing a stern eye on Dorothy and her playmates, The Tin Woodman, The Scarecrow and The Cowardly Lion. "Playing hookey?" Dorothy switched her skirt importantly, "We're on special business to investigate the homes where you send the toys."

The Cowardly Lion leaped aboard an electric train. "A remote control railroad," he growled joyfully, "is exactly right for Washington fathers to play with on Christmas Day." "But you must remind Santa," squeaked The Tin Woodman, "to put in an educational toy for Junior or he'll cry."

"I must go over the orders for dolls," piped Dorothy bustling over to Santa's desk. "I have everything in stock," boomed Santa from his throne, "to furnish a one-room apartment or a 10-room mansion. And dolls from gurgling babies to teen-age ladies."

P. S. The Committee appointed Dorothy to find good homes for all the toys. See them before you give your order to Santa at the Emerald City. He'll be waiting for you. School's closed tomorrow so you'll see everything in the Land of Oz. Watch your friends from that wonderful country—in life-size—in our Eighth and E Streets window. The exciting tunes popular in the Land of Oz will thrill you.

Treasury Says It Can Borrow $3,200,000,000

Morgenthau Finds $45,000,000,000 Isn't Actual Debt Limit

By Irving Pelmeter.
Associated Press Staff Writer

The Treasury, after analyzing its debts and this week's large borrowings, found yesterday it could borrow approximately $3,200,000,000 more before reaching the statutory debt limit.

Half a billion dollars of the Treasury's borrowing power was used up Tuesday in the sale of 2 per cent 9 to 11-year bonds, an operation which Secretary Morgenthau acclaimed as a success because bidders for the bonds asked for more than $6,000,000 worth.

1917 Figure Explained

The Treasury said that the statutory debt limit fixed in 1917 is not exactly the $45,000,000,000 figure commonly mentioned by officials. The 1917 law, it was disclosed, merely limited the Treasury to borrowing $45,000,000,000 more than was already owed on securities issued under previous acts. The new computation showed that $613,869,597 of the present debt represents pre-1917 obligations which are not involved in the $45,000,000,000 limit. Substracting this amount from the $41,296,505,674 debt the Treasury owed before this week's half billion borrowing, the Treasury still had $4,317,363,923 of unused borrowing power.

From this figure must be subtracted the $500,000 borrowed this week and also an estimated $615,000,000 of debt which will be created automatically in connection with previous sales of baby bonds.

How long the remaining $3,200,000,000 borrowing power will last, officials appeared unwilling to predict. Some estimates, however, indicate that about $2,000,000,000 of it may be needed to finance the deficit for the remainder of the current fiscal year, or until June 30, 1940, and reports from some officials indicate that the next fiscal year's deficit may be roughly $2,500,000,000.

U. S. Credit Excellent

The President and Morgenthau have indicated in recent weeks that, sooner or later, Congress must either increase the debt limit, levy new taxes, or cut down expenditures.

Whatever the decision, Morgenthau told reporters yesterday, the Government's credit seems to be as good as it was before the war administered a severe shock to financial markets.

He pointed that although the Treasury borrowing had increased the supply of Government securities in the market, the bond market had gone up since the financing was announced Tuesday.

"Station PDS Presents," broadcast by Lee Everett from the Peoples Drug Store Studio, Eleventh and G streets northwest, is presented each weekday morning from 7:30 to 8:30 over Station WMAL by Peoples Drug Stores in cooperation with The Washington Post. Anyone over 18 years old may participate in the auditions at 7:30 p. m. Tuesdays at the N. B. C. Studios. Performers are paid $5 for their appearance on this program.

Three Are Appointed To State Hospital Board

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 30 (AP).—Appointment of John W. Farrell and Dr. Lester B. Goodhand, Baltimore, and Dr. Robert J. Spittel, Catonsville, to 6-year terms on the Spring Grove State Hospital board of managers, was announced today by Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor.

They succeed W. Thomas Hormes, Catonsville; Mrs. Edward A. Park, Towson, and Dr. Gordon T. Atkinson, Crisfield.

News of Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris.

TROIKA'S SHAMROCK TOUCH. Lee Kerry, a tenor-ing gossoon from Eire, will open at Troika on Saturday, December 9. He'll be emcee as well as singer and Mrs. Helen Hamilton vows he's outlandishly handsome . . . La Hamilton is also sitting around weaving spells in the hope she'll be able to lasso Yasha Nigogossoff, one of the three dagger dancers in the country, for Troika on the same date. We suggested that she ask Prince Vada whether Yasha would arrive, but she said she was afraid to ask . . . The oldtime Thanksgiving will be celebrated in Troika tomorrow with many parties of those who were turned away from last week's Thanksgiving.

FOOTBALL SPECIAL. Dick Koons and the entire Mayflower Lounge orchestra will entrain on Sunday morning for the Giants-Redskins game in New York that afternoon. Maurice Kafka will "chaperone" the boys. What a duenna! . . . Owner Vincent Gallagher of the King Cole Room and Singer Arthur Todd are off to the Army-Navy game this Saturday. And the Navy had better make good or Annapolis grad Gallagher will be plenty embarrassed. Mr. Gallagher will stay over for the Giants-Redskins scrimmage, but Arthur will fly back for the King Cole supper session.

BROWN DERBY REMODELING. The Brown Derby will be switched end-from-end in about a week. A stage with runway will be installed where the bar stands and the bar will be placed in the alcove near the door. Booths will be ripped out and long banquette seats installed . . . With a full stage, Al and George will be able to go expansive in the art of screwball drammer. There'll be chorines, too, in bustles and tights, a la the nifty nineties. A big party will give the send-off to the new Brown Derby. As Al says, "Hold your hats, kids! Here we go!"

"ICE FOLLIES" THEME SONG. "Open Up Your Heart," the sprightly melody composed by Anchor Room's Matt Windsor, has been adopted by the "Ice Follies" as one of their principal numbers while they're on tour. They'll return to Washington for a second engagement in a couple of months.

ROVING CAMERA. Madrillon. A big and cheery party congratulating President William Wright of Galt's on his fiftieth anniversary with the firm. Carr and Don composed special lyrics to "B. B. Polka" for the occasion.

Club Lafayette. Debutante Marilynn Himes, radiant in white and orchids, at a large party in her honor . . . The "bon voyage" party in compliment to Miss Charlotte Hayhurst.

Shar-Zad. Manager Frank Swadley, of the Carlton, dancing with Singer Billie Bailey, of the Mayflower . . . Judy Bowles watching the clouds roll by on the Shar-Zad "sky" . . . Maestro Bill McCune looking 5 pounds lighter. He says it's his new haircut.

Lotus. Manager Robert D. Blackistone, of the Colonial Hotel, waving a salute to Bill Strickland . . . Impresario Leon Brusiloff telling friends what a knockout the vaudeville is at the Atlas Theater.

Jack Rollins and Norma Lindsley, who lead off the Club Lafayette's "Nights in Dixie" and "Latin-American Nights"

Rainbow Room. George Harrison, the chain restaurant magnate, enjoying the Rainbow lads' playing of "Table in the Corner" as he sat at a table in a corner.

Metronome Room. A perfect deluge of folks in formals. Made the place look like an opening party . . . We found they were the after-theater crowd from the Civic Theater, being held in the Wardman Park Theater this week . . . With the State society dances of Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Jersey, North Dakota and Arkansas all on the Wardman list, the Metronome Room will certainly have flocks of dressed-up late arrivals right along. They can't leave Wardman without stopping for a whirl to those King's Jesters' rhythms.

MEN WITH IRON WILLS. Can you give up cigarettes? Well, there are those who can . . . Max Lowe, amusement manager of the Shoreham, who said, "I haven't been without a pipe, cigarette or cigar in my mouth for 30 years," stopped smoking with a click last year, hasn't touched tobacco since . . . Mayfair's Manager A. G. Peterson decided a few months ago that he was smoking too much, stopped completely . . . The idea seems to be that tapering off is no good. Just stops.

BRIGHT INTERLUDES. Cafe Caprice. The guitar and clarinet serenading of Ray Nelson and Billy Alden, with Ray tossing in some vocalizing. Music with "umph."

Pirates' Den. The roving accordioning of Rollin' Bones (who also answers to the name of Thacher Chase). Very bright and melodious . . . And the "hot trumpet" of Scarface Jack as he plays from aloft.

Hi-Hat. Al Lewis giving that American touch to the "Volga Boatman." The Russ tune should be retitled "Cuttin' Up on the Wabash" for Al's version.

BACK HOME IN INDIANA. Manager Ford Minnick, of Hotel 2400 Sixteenth Street, and his wife, attractive Evalyn Tyner (yes, the same Evalyn who can make a piano jump through hoops) are off to Indiana for a week. Evalyn is a true Hoosier, cannot resist the periodical call of Indiana.

STYLES FOR MEN will be shown at the fashion luncheon in the Pall Mall Room on Saturday. Two of the Arthur Murray dancers will model the clothes for men. Said Miss Ethel Fistere, chief Arthur Murrayette, "Those boys will probably buy everything they wear in the show" . . . Feminine pretties to be shown will feature togs for Southern wear . . . There'll be demonstrations of the tango, rumba and new pirolito.

HARMONICA MIRACLE. Jimmy La Kore, the big blond harmonica player, who's such a hit in the new Bamboo Gardens show, plays two harmonicas at the same time, then plays a harmonica behind his back . . . Next thing we know, he'll be playing a harmonica in the next room . . . He's at his best in a fine version of "My Hero" from the "Chocolate Soldier" . . . Winton and Diane do some brilliant tap stepping . . . The Wanger Girls are in grass skirts this week, shake them so vigorously that the grass flies all around the floor.

NOVELTIES IN VICTUALS. Hall's. It's ribs at Hall's this week. Spareribs and sauerkraut. Doesn't the thought make your mouth water? Or short ribs of beef with brown potatoes. Um-m-m. Neptune Room. Did you ever have a mince-meat muffin? Or rum raisin ice cream? Believe us, they're wonderful. The Neptune Room chefs are always producing novelties that aren't in the cook books. Dick's Grill. Shrimp creole will tempt and satisfy the most fussy-minded diner. It's shrimp with a N'Orleans complex.

"GAY NINETIES" OPENS. A sharp and sizzling new spot, the Gay Nineties, will open on the Mount Vernon Boulevard on Saturday eve There'll be continuous entertainment, dancing until dawn, a surcharged gay '90's atmosphere . . . Jack Thoman, former manager of the Belasco Theater, is in charge of entertainment. The owner is Dave Stone, of New York, who sponsored Jimmy Durante in his early days.

LARKING OUTA TOWN. Fat Boy. Double portions of rhythm served up by the De Vaughn Clements Orchestra. Dancing every night including Sunday. Handsome surroundings in modern red and chromium. And just a short drive out New York avenue.

River Bend. George Stein's orchestra, one of Dave McWilliams' star units, is pulling in big crowds of dancers every night. Songs by Lee Mason. Room for hundreds on the big and glossy dance floor. Down the road beyond Alexandria.

Knotty Pine Tavern. The fine hospitality of Owner (Chuck) Snyder and the bright dance music Ray King's Orchestra are spelling constantly increasing popularity for Knotty Pine. To get there you drive out the Defense highway to Lanham, Md.

Funds for Relief To Last Full Year

$1,477,000,000 WPA appropriation "do" for the entire fiscal year, Col. Harrington said both the requirements of the relief act and expected seasonal slacking in relief demands had been considered.

"I don't want to go to jail," he laughed. "And the law requires us to make the funds last. We have had this in mind right along in maintaining an average of 2,000,000 on the rolls. I am not in a position to talk about next year's appropriations. But I can say that we will make the current appropriation stretch to the end of the fiscal year."

In past years, as winter relief loads passed estimates, WPA has invariably sought supplemental funds in the spring. Last year, Congress allowed for this by making only an initial 7-month appropriation, which it later supplemented for the last 5 months.

Harrington forecast that the December work relief load will mount to 2,250,000. This would include a regular WPA enrollment of 2,200,000, plus a 50,000 short-time enrollment in States affected by flood and drought disasters.

WPA employment for the week ended November 22 stood at 1,986,999, an increase of 26,421 over the previous week and compared with 1,930,463 on November 8. Harrington said further increases in the three months ahead would allow for the 2,000,000 average, and counterbalancing reductions would begin in March.

The work relief commissioner said he did not challenge the evidence that private employment is increasing, and unemployment decreasing. But he asserted that such employment gains as have resulted from war trade, defense spending and expanded industrial activity have not affected the type of labor employed by WPA.

Week-End Moral Rearmament Opened

Moral Rearmament Week-end was opened last night by Speaker William B. Bankhead, of the House of Representatives, in an address broadcast by NBC. His subject was "Moral Rearmament—the Rise of a New Spirit."

In this country, Bankhead saw "a renewed hope for industrial peace," as "one result of the rising tide of moral rearmament." Throughout the world, he discerned that "where we failed in our dreams for the original League of Nations was in not allowing for the fact that no international system, however nobly conceived, can endure without a new spirit in the nations which compose it.

"The call of the hour," he said, "is a call to strength. Our country must look to her defenses. But no material defenses can serve us long unless behind them there stands a united people, strong in spirit, conscious of a common mission, prepared for any sacrifice . . .

"If we can demonstrate that at last on this continent we have found the secret of unity and peace among men, then we can become the peacemakers of mankind—makers of the just peace that will be permanent."

Joe Cook Recalls Days When He 'Got the Hook'

Won Start in 'Amateur Night' Free-for-Alls; C. Frederick Clark Does Over a Sousa Tune; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

THOSE WHO DEEM "breaking into the movies" a tough order should lunch with Joe Cook one day. If the day should happen to have been yesterday—as it was for some of the drama desk and radio people—they would have learned about the tussle it was in the old days to wangle one's way into a place on the professional stage.

After Joe has recalled that his appearance on the stage of the Earle Theater today in his "Laugh Factory" revue will be his first on a local rostrum in four or five years and has dropped the hint that his full-length "Buggy Ride" production will be ready to go into rehearsal in about a month—barring unforeseen complications—it is inevitable that he will get around to the fascinating business of how he got started in "show business." He did it the hard way, which was practically the only way there was 'way back yonder.

BELL

Fresh out of Evansville, Ind., the "Cook Brothers—Jugglers," with a third member of the old Hoosier gang, called "Curley," crashed New York in home-made costumes, needled by their mother, and with a handful of "props" they had made for themselves. They fought their way to attention via the old "amateur nights" in the Miner burlesque houses—where you earned $10 if you won first prize and were as apt as not to get killed if the mob out front and up in the galleries didn't care for your especial brand of art.

The boys' first whirl at an amateur night was at Miner's Eighth Avenue Theater. Before going on, they lied their way into favor with The Gilhooleys, a real juggling act, by claiming to know all about the "pass six," "shoulder throw" and other things of which they never had heard while mastering all three of their tricks.

A word from the Gilhooleys that these Cook kids knew their stuff, prompted the announcer to give the lads a handsome build-up that rather awed the audience. When they bowed off they didn't get a hand, but they didn't get any vegetables or raspberries, either, so figured they must be good.

When the contestants were lined up on the stage to have the prizes held over their heads to see who would get the most applause, the "Cook Brothers—Jugglers," won probably the greatest ovation of Bronx cheers that ever rattled the rafters of an ancient music hall. They had laid an egg that would shame an ostrich!

Nevertheless, they kept on plugging and finally copped a first prize, after having walked all the way to Brooklyn to make the try. With the $10 prize and another $10 of "throw money," picked up from the stage, they walked all the way back to New York from force of habit.

On the way, they had to put on a whole show for a skeptical Bowery cop, who was sure their bags of tinsel Indian clubs were swag from some recent looting or other. The cop thought they were so good that Joe says he gave them the biggest hand they ever got, in or out of a theater, and asked them to come back on his beat and put on a show any time they liked!

There is, of course, a great deal more to it than that, but that will give you a rough idea. Joe Cook has traveled a bit since those "good old days."

When he gets around to it, Joe will call your attention to the fact that every musical show he ever has been in has had a three-word title—"Earl Carroll's Vanities," "Fine and Dandy," "Rain or Shine," "Hold Your Horses," etc.—and that that is one of the reasons "Buggy Ride" will be changed to something with one more word in it before the public sees it. It is called that now because there is a buggy ride in the script. And speaking of script, "Buggy Ride" started out to be a "book" musical, but the plot seemed to slow up the fun, so it has been converted into a revue. Music and lyrics are by four unknown youngsters—two to each department — described by Mr. Cook as the legitimate successors to Cole Porter and Rodgers and Hart. That will be plenty good enough.

Since we seem to be definitely on the topic of vaudeville, Sidney Lust is doing a little Grade-A bragging about the current stage bill he is putting on at his Bethesa Theater through Saturday. Headlining the bill is Pinky Lee, comedy star of an N. B. C. coast-to-coast radio program, who is putting on a quaint little conceit called "Ship Ahooey," with "Tanglefoot" also in the running, if you can handle a wad of paradox. In the No. 2 spot are the La Vernes, sensational European dancers, specializing in the gentle art of the Apache and adagio forms of physical durability. Last, but not least, to coin a slick phrase, come the Kamis Brothers, in barrel and perch tricks and some juggling. Mr. Lust confides that his acts had the customers all steamed up at yesterday's opening.

And not to get too far off base, the Earle Theater orchestra will break out a special overture, beginning today, in the form of a unique arrangement of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever," boiled up by Freddie Clark. This typically American number will be played in symphonic form, as a music-box minuet, as a waltz and in the Wagnerian grand opera style. The different musical moods were suggested by The Post's columnist, Damon Runyon, whose thought it was that Sousa's "Stars and Stripes" should be considered one of our national anthems.

Boss Man in the 'Laugh Factory'

JOE COOK,

famous star of vaudeville, musical comedy, revue, screen and radio, who comes to the stage of the Earle Theater today with his "Laugh Factory" miniature melange of merrymaking. Mr. Cook is assisted in his lunacies by half a dozen or so experts in nonsense. The title means exactly what it says

'Elizabeth and Essex' at the Met

Having already enjoyed two eminently successful weeks at the Earle Theater, the Warner Brothers' superb Technicolor production of "The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex" yesterday inaugurated a repeat downtown engagement on the screen at the Metropolitan.

Adapted from the Maxwell Anderson play, "Elizabeth, the Queen," this magnificently caparisoned subject affords Betty Davis the greatest and most completely realized opportunity she has had before the cameras to demonstrate the remarkable range of her interpretative powers. Her portrayal of the role of England's Virgin Queen is by far the most impressive thing she has done during a career thickly studded with fine accomplishments. In the costellar titular role of the Earl of Essex, Errol Flynn plays with vigor and effectiveness, if not with all of the telling lights and shades Miss Davis draws into her portrait of an harassed and vindictive ruler, hedged about by duplicity, intrigue and tremendous problems of heart and state.

While the play colors authentic fact with a high quality of imaginative fiction, the basis of the tragic love story is sufficiently sound to meet with the approval of even the most captious historian. Elizabeth always is the dominant figure, but never so prominent as to dwarf the importance of many other notable characters, impersonated with uniform skill by an especially well-chosen cast. Olivia de Havilland, as Lady Penelope Gray; Nanette Fabares, the Mistress Margaret Radcliffe; Donald Crisp, as Lord Bacon; Alan Hale, as the Earle of Tyrone, Irish revolutionist; Vincent Price, Henry Stephenson, Henry Daniell, Ralph Forbes and Robert Warwick are among the excellent players who lend the drama both balance and substance.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Nov. 30.

Hollywood is a home-loving place! Pat O'Brien built a new home right beside his old one. When Pat first settled here he bought a little house on a big piece of land. Rooms were tiny. Soon he added den, library and nursery for his two adopted children. Then they wanted a larger place, but Pat, sentimental Irishman that he is, said he couldn't leave it, so added another story onto what he had. The effect was grotesque, so he built a new one right smack beside the old place. Told me: "This is the first time I've ever been able to come home, light a fire, sit in my garden and watch it grow." As a matter of fact, it's the first home he's ever known—he was brought up in an apartment where his parents lived for 30 years.

HOPPER

His pal, Jimmy Cagney, has built a bit of his old N. Y. habitat into his Colawater Canyon home. It has a cobblestone courtyard with two gas street lights—replica of the street where he used to tackle the toughs on the East Side. Whenever a snob drifts in, Jimmy shows off the Cagney ancestral background!

Which reminds me—there's another hilltop mansion on the market Adolphe Menjou's—which has five fireplaces and five bathrooms. Asking price—$50,000! Wonder if this includes Adolphe's silk sheets? Reminds me—Baron de Rothschild's sheets not only had to be silk, but woven in a special way!

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 30 (INS).—Henry Fonda gets a reprieve from whiskers, frontiersmen and character parts when he steps into the romantic lead opposite Alice Faye in "Lillian Russell"—and if I could see Hank now, I bet he's happy. Not that he didn't want to play the run of excellent character roles starting with "Young Mr. Lincoln," "Drums Along the Mohawk" and "Grapes of Wrath"—but you can overdo a good thing. Hank is too young and too handsome to be adorned with a set of chin whiskers and a long haircut for the rest of his movie days.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Darryl Zanuck agrees that young Mr. Fonda should get a chance to make hearts flutter again, which is the main reason he switched him into this spot, previously announced for Don Ameche. As Lillian Russell's fourth husband, the dashing and adventurous Alexander Moore, Henry will have plenty of chance to be romantic. "Lillian Russell," which starts in January, will probably be filmed in Technicolor, with Irving Cummings directing and Gene Markey producing.

Only Shirley Temple playing "Camille" would have struck me as a wilder thought than the news that Sally Rand is abandoning her fans to go on a road tour in "Susan and God." Ever since her trials and tribulations with her girl show at the San Francisco Fair and the ensuing bankruptcy suit, La Rand has hankered to turn dramatic actress. Sally, who is a smart business woman, is tired of censorship troubles. But why "Susan and God?" I hear she tried out in the Gertie Lawrence stage show some time ago and reports are she wasn't bad at all. But first she will settle her legal troubles in San Francisco and fill a contract in Los Angeles before taking off (no pun intended) as "Susan."

The thing holding up the sale of "Philadelphia Story" to the movies is that if a major company buys it they want it for one of their own glamour girls—and the New York producers want Katharine Hepburn to go with the play. I understand this is what cooled M-G-M on the deal, since they wanted it for Norma Shearer. Another stumbling block is that Hepburn doesn't want the film version started until after the full run of the show, which might make it stale. Several years ago Universal paid a small fortune for "Broadway," but by the time they were permitted to film it the plot had cropped up in so many disguises at other studios it seemed old in comparison.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Leo McCarey will be in the hospital two more months, but is out of danger unless complications set in; who says glamour girls are vain? My favorite "interviewer," Roz Russell, dined with her director, Howard Hawks, at the Beverly Brown Derby with her hair rolled up on curlers; Wally Beery is a full-fledged aviator now and can do tail spins in bombers with the best of them; Sonja Henie gave herself a farewell party at the Bali last night with her mother, her brother Leif and her skating partner, Harrison Thomas, as the only guests. She leaves on another skating tour Saturday—but where was Alan Curtis? Sad to hear of the passing of Walter Catlett's mother in Oakland; Errol Flynn, who once starred in "Robin Hood," spending lots of his time at the new Robin Hood Cafe.

Robert Stack, Deanna Durbin's leading man, devoting himself to Helen Parrish at the La Conga; good luck to the Ritz Brothers, who open at the Paramount Theater in Los Angeles. We followed them into the Golden Gate Theater in San Francisco, where they were a riot; Dorothy Draper has arrived in Hollywood to supervise the interior decorating for the new Arrowhead Springs Hotel; Norma Hall, who was so unhappy when she read about Jackie Coogan's engagement, stepping out with two beaux, Bruce Cabot and Jimmy Bryant; Dorothy Lamour heading to Santa Barbara for a few days' rest before starting her picture with Tyrone Power next Monday; after a marvelous week in Philadelphia we hate to leave here.

That's all for today—see you tomorrow from Pittsburgh!

Airport Plans Win Approval Of Roosevelt

Models of Buildings Shown to President By CAA Chairman

President Roosevelt yesterday approved master plans and building models for Gravelly Point Airport, Chairman Robert H. Hinckley, of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, declared after a White House call.

Work on the terminal buildings, Hinckley said, should be in progress by March, but specifications and bids are yet to be drafted.

Hinckley was accompanied by John Carmody, administrator of the Federal Works Agency; Col. Sumpter Smith, chairman of the Washington National Airport Commission, and W. E. Reynolds of the Public Buildings Administration.

During the conference, the officials showed Mr. Roosevelt architects' drawings and models of buildings, grounds and runways at the new terminal.

The landing area will be completed about July 4 and terminal buildings will be ready early next fall, Hinckley predicted.

Hydraulic fill work on the airport, he added, already is 95 per cent completed and grading operations are well advanced.

1941 Budget Fixes $900 Pay Rise for Capital Parks Chief

Increase Approved by Ickes as Step to Improve Administration; Report Urging Reorganization Pleases Secretary

The superintendency of National Capital Parks will be made a $6,500 post in the 1941 budget, now being drafted, as one step toward improvement of Washington's park system, it was learned yesterday.

Secretary of Interior Ickes has approved the $900 raise from $5,600 and is expected soon to request a special civil service examination to find a successor to C. Marshall Finnan, transferred last summer to Zion National Park.

According to Interior Department officials, Ickes is pleased with the Wagner-Sauers report which recommends a reorganization of the National Capital Parks office.

In their report H. S. Wagner, Akron, and Charles G. Sauers, Chicago, said the parks superintendency should pay $10,000, but Ickes is reported to have lowered this figure to $6,500.

Ickes is said to have referred the report to Nathan Margold, departmental solicitor, for perusal and criticism preliminary to adoption of its recommendations, in whole or in part.

U. S. Purchase Of Land Approved

Chief Justice Wheat of the District Court yesterday approved the Government's purchase of the Boulevard Apartments, 2121 New York avenue northwest, for $1,200,000. The building will be torn down to make room for the new War Department Building.

The Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., New York, which holds a mortgage, will get $773,939. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., also a mortgage holder, will get $200,000. The Washington properties, Inc., operator of the apartment house, will be paid $16,000. About $200,000 will be distributed later in the same proportions.

NIGHT COUGHS due to colds...checked without "dosing". VICKS VAPORUB PROVED BY 2 GENERATIONS

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Nov. 30.

KNOWLEDGE: Alfred Duff Cooper, former First Lord of the British Admiralty, attended a party last week-end with Herbert Bayard Swope and Heywood Broun . . . The Americans were anxious to learn from Duff Cooper some inside facts concerning events in Europe. The Britisher, therefore, sat with Broun and Swope—but said practically nothing. Because the questions asked by Swope were answered by Broun, and the questions asked by Broun were answered by Swope.

SUCCESS: In the publicity campaign for the new Joan Bennett picture, "The Housekeeper's Daughter," Producer Hal Roach prepared a series of rhymes such as: "She couldn't cook, Her work was slow, But, oh, how she could sew and sew." Another of the ads read: "Five Men Chased After the Housekeeper's Daughter—Who Did Things She Hadn't Oughter" . . . Miss Bennett objected to the use of these suggestive ads, but not even the intervention of her fiance, Walter Wanger, could induce Roach to alter his plans . . . The screen star, therefore, wrote a letter disassociating herself from this campaign and mailed it to 6,000 women's clubs throughout America . . . The club members, who had had no previous knowledge of the picture or of the ads, responded immediately—by rushing to see the movie, "The Housekeeper's Daughter."

PLIGHT: Harold Rome, the author of "Pins & Needles," told Moss Hart the other night that he is worried about the Fritz Kuhn trial—because if Kuhn is convicted he might have to change the Nazi sketch which recently was inserted in his revue . . . "I know all about that," Hart comforted. "Two of my characters in 'As Thousands Cheer' were John D. Rockefeller—who was 95 at the time—and Mahatma Gandhi, who was always going on hunger strikes. And the only trouble we had was when Clifton Webb got sick."

SONG: When Hart was preparing "As Thousands Cheer," Irving Berlin played for him two of the tunes which were to go into the show . . . Berlin was very much excited about these songs, but Moss didn't share that enthusiasm. Berlin played the tunes over and over again, but still they didn't impress Hart as good songs . . . "I think I know what the matter is," Hart finally told Berlin. "Please play 'Remember'" . . . Berlin played that song, which had sold more than a million copies . . . "I was right," Hart stated. "The trouble is with your playing not with the music." . . . And, so, the songs went into the show. They were "Supper Time" and "We're Having a Heat Wave."

SOLUTION: Tommy Manville's secretary went to Macy's this week to buy ten bottles of perfume which Manville will present as Christmas gifts . . . "The most expensive bottles we have cost $35 each," the salesgirl informed . . . "That's too bad," the secretary explained, "because Mr. Manville ordered me to buy $50 bottles" . . . A compromise finally was made. The salesgirl packed each bottle with little stuffed birds perched on bows of ribbons—costing $15 each.

CHATTER: Benny Goodman and Belle Baker have organized a music-publishing firm. Their first publication will be "I Dance Alone," written by Belle's son, Herbert Baker, who now is at Yale . . . Lawrence Tibbett, jr., has joined the cast of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" . . . John "Shipwreck" Kelly and Howard Hawks will make a movie out of Ernest Hemingway's short story, "The Short, Happy Life of Francis McCumber." Hemingway will write the scenario. It will be made in New York . . . Special Prosecutor Amen will resort to court proceedings if Mayor La Guardia persists in his demand that Amen retire, now that Brooklyn will have a new district attorney. He'll quit only if Gov. Lehman tells him to.

TRUTH: Richard A. Knight, the socialite lawyer, was at the New York A. C. Monday afternoon and discussed his marital woes with former Police Commissioner George V. McLaughlin . . . "Listen, Mac," Knight pleaded, "you don't believe those stories about me, do you? You don't believe those things my wife accuses me of doing—getting tight and embarrassing her by what she calls strange antics—tell me you don't believe it" . . . "All right," McLaughlin told him. "I don't believe it." Whereupon Knight went to the Met premiere and was tossed out for standing on his head in the lobby.

TRADITION: The License Bureau yesterday vetoed a plan to utilize for advertising purposes the backs of the hansom cabs which ride through Central Park . . . The advertising deal already had been negotiated. The carriages were to carry ads for the new book, "Marriage, Morals and Mothballs" . . . The License Bureau preferred to preserve the last frontier of romance in Manhattan.

Those Marxes Are Still at It!

Les Freres Marx, which is to say Groucho, Harpo and Chico, have returned to F street in their latest comedy, "At the Circus." The romp opened yesterday at the Columbia Theater.

One need hardly go into the setting of their latest charade; that is apparent in the title. There are laughs and music in the piece, as well as a company of expert farceurs.

What one does struggle to say about the latest Marx effort is that it is still a highly amusing frolic, no matter what greedy carpers may have to say about its shortcomings. It has been said that this does not represent the Marxes at their best; that "At the Circus" is not "A Night at the Opera." So what? We say to the first, What picture could be so delirious as that operatic jag? To the second, "At the Circus" is still the Marx Brothers, and, as a result, is a heap funnier than most comedies.

The world must surely be going mad, for the faithful not to appreciate the sight of Groucho walking on the ceiling, of Chico handing out cigars in a dwarf's house, of Harpo exerting his incredible fascination over a group of roustabouts or of Margaret Dumont, that epitome of dignity, hanging from a trapeze clad in her—er, underthings. What more can one ask?

True, one is fully conscious of the formula which is employed in the Marx films. There is that mixture of boy-girl songs and plot complications which has been in all their efforts. Comparisons do crop up with their earlier epics, but viewed for itself alone, "At the Circus" contains gags and wisecracks aplenty.

Besides the help the boys get from that faithful veteran of all their stage and film adventures, the irrascible Miss Dumont, there is Eve Arden stalking about as Peerless Pauline, the Spider Lady, who walks on the ceiling; Nat Pendleton, as Goliath the Strong Man, and Jerry Marenghi as that little mite, Prof. Atom. Kenny Baker and Florence Rice are the boy-girl duo and their Harburg-Arlen song is "Two Blind Loves."

So, as long as you are not so demanding as to expect another "A Night at the Opera," you will find "At the Circus" blest with memorable merriment.

Si, Si, Signet!

1

PEPITO: "All I hear tonight is, 'Si, si—yes, yes'—every time the boss says to a guest, 'Another highball?' That Signet—she is a hit—yes? No?"

2

CHIQUITO: "Si, si. Signet she make the fiesta. All night long I do the rhumba on this glass. But the applause? — for Signet. And the boss?—he only talk about Signet, too. He say..."

3

"Here's the story on Signet as I get it. They age Signet the way no other bonded American whiskey has ever been aged...

It's Aged in Aged Wood

"That's right, just the way those marvelous French brandies and light-bodied Scotch whiskies are aged. For four years Signet ripens in casks pre-mellowed by prior use in aging other fine Hiram Walker whiskies. But Signet is light even before it reaches the aging casks. Signet is distilled for lightness. And, believe it or not, Signet is plenty light on the pocket, too."

4

PEPITO: "So that's why everyone say, 'What flavor!'...Never do I hear such praise since I am on highball glass."

CHIQUITO: "Si, compañero, Signet is unfair to glasses. They don't notice us any more—only the whiskey!"

This Is Finland— Map of Finland, superimposed on a map of Texas and Oklahoma, shows the size of the tiny nation who's liberty is at stake today. plicable on like articles within the North."

Listing some of the rail charges in dispute, the commission said it was "clear the rates assailed on those commodities are unduly prejudicial to the Southern producers and unduly preferential of their Northern competitors."

In dissenting, Eastman argued that the average cost of service was higher in the South than in the North.

East man charged that Southern lines, connecting with Northern carriers, "have insisted on divisions which would give them the lion's share of the joint revenue." He suggested a system of division which which he said would give the complainants what they desired.

Miller said in a dissenting opinion he believed the Southern complaint should be dismissed "for lack of proof."

The majority decision ordered reductions on stoves and ranges, stone, enameled iron or steel plumbers' goods, iron body valves, fire hydrants, cast iron pipe fittings, brass pipe fittings, cocks and valves, talc and soapstone, and papetries.

Reductions were denied on hollowware, fireplace fixtures, electrical appliances, boots and shoes, excelsior, wood, and excelsior packing mats, paper articles except papetries, metal furniture, canned goods, pottery, cordage and binder twine.

The commission fixed March 1, 1940, as the effective date of the order. Meanwhile, Northern carriers may seek a rehearing before the commission or appeal to the Federal courts.

British Fliers Down Mine-Layer

Ems Tuesday, they machine-gunned five mine-laying seaplanes. The official statement on the raid said that 12 British twin-engined fighters were sent out to reconnoiter the German base and attack German seaplanes. The British planes flew 500 miles to make the attack and all 12 were said to have returned.

While Britain chalked up the loss of two more freighters today, the admiralty retaliated at sea by laying a new mine field in the North Sea covering 300 square miles midway between the Thames Estuary and the Scheldt River in Holland..

Warning Posted

Notice of the position of the new mine field was posted tonight and a warning was issued that all vessels entering the area did so at their own peril. At its northernmost point the field is about 30 miles off Harwich. It stretches southward 20 miles and eastward between 10 and 20 miles.

Seven officers and 15 of the crew of the 2,483-ton Newport freighter Uskmouth landed at a south coast town today with stories of the shelling and sinking of the ship by a U-boat yesterday. Two members of the crew were killed by shrapnel when the submarine fired on the vessel after missing her with three torpedoes.

The survivors said the U-boat fired for two and a half hours before the Uskmouth sank in flames. The crew was put off in a lifeboat during the shelling.

Here's a decoration you don't want on your car. It's the new "absolute rejection" sticker recently adopted under the District's auto inspection system. Once this emblem is stuck to your car, you're "stuck" to have the vehicle towed away. It means the auto is unfit for driving. Police can't miss the big, yellow seal and have been instructed to make immediate arrests if any car appears on the street with one entire line of traffic behind, he pointed out.

Several correspondents urged police to take as drastic action against "slow poke" and "center-of-the-road" drivers as they do against speeders and reckless motorists.

"In my 14 years of driving in Washington," wrote a reader, "I have noticed most the failure of many motorists to yield the right of way. Just what attraction the middle of the street holds for them, I have never been able to fathom. It is this failure to keep to the right that causes other drivers to pass on the right, endangering life and limb."

In conducting a series of test trips of his own, another reader of The Post stories said he found the "longest way around was usually the shortest way home." His route, he said, was from the Court House vicinity to Glover Park. The time was always about 7 p. m.

"At this time," wrote the motorist, "a person who turns on to Massachusetts avenue at Fourth or Fifth streets northwest and drives west at an average speed of 20 miles an hour, will find that two out of every three traffic lights to Twenty-second street turn against him."

Past Efforts Praised

In many cases, readers praised traffic officials for past improvements—the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway, better light timing on Sixth, Thirteenth streets and other streets, but asked them "not to stop there."

In line with motorist opinions and The Post series, this month's issue of the American Motorist—official publication of the AAA—contains an editorial demanding widespread traffic reforms in Washington. Outlining various problems of safety, parking and taxes, the editorial adds:

"When are we going to have a review of traffic lights, now in many instances so placed as to impede traffic without promoting safety?"

Washington's motoring public, according to letters received anent The Post series, is asking the same question.

Boxer Sticks Chin Out, but the Law Pulls Its Punch

Ken Overland, 26, leading contender for the welterweight boxing championship, fought a one-round legal draw with Traffic Court Judge John P. McMahon yesterday.

Here for a scheduled fight next Monday, Overland was showing plenty of speed, not in the ring but on the District's streets, when he was stopped by a motorcycle policeman.

He pleaded guilty and Judge McMahon, who is a fight fan, took his personal bond, with the remark:

"I guess you can beat everything but the law. Hereafter I wish you would observe our traffic ordinances."

Mrs. Van Zandt Urges Nations Federate When Peace Comes

Jewish Community Center Hears Author Call Western Bloc Impracticable and Recommend That Democracies Unite

The Federation of Nations' principles laid down by Clarence Streit, long Geneva correspondent of the New York Times, should be considered "in any European peace," Mrs. Lydia Van Hagan Van Zandt, author and lecturer, said last night at the Jewish Community Center.

She spoke on "What Kind of Peace Can Europe Make" on the center's Town Hall Associate Group. Her talk was followed by a forum supervised by Joseph M. Tuchman, who introduced Mrs. Van Zandt.

The speaker contrasted Streit's program for a union of democracies, including the United States, England, France, the Scandinavian countries and the commonwealths of the British Empire, with isolationist principles of such writers as Stuart Chase. Any plan for a Western Hemisphere bloc, she said, would prove impracticable not only because of the necessity for hemisphere defense, but because "many Latin-American countries are not democracies at all."

Yesterday's attack by Soviet Russia on Finland she considered "another emphasis written in blood for world reorganization."

"In any peace in Europe," she added, "the United States will have a great stake. It is necessary, from a selfish economic standpoint, for this country to participate in any European peace."

Asked from the floor, "Do you think we will be asked to underwrite the successful termination of this war?", Mrs. Van Zandt pressed for a definition of "successful termination." "We'll be in this war in six months," her questioner declared. "We will be asked to aid in the destruction of Hitler and the German nation."

"That," said the speaker, "is not Streit's idea at all."

The forum was followed by receipt of the "Town Hall of the Air" broadcast from New York.

Exposing Swindles

The District Bar Association's special committee investigating credit rackets in Washington is rendering a notable public service. Reports indicate that a large number of low-income families, who are least able to endure such treatment, are being more or less openly swindled. A committee of lawyers is especially qualified to expose these practices.

It should be clearly understood that the probe is not directed at the great majority of reputable institutions which are doing business on a credit basis in Washington. Legitimate credit transactions frequently serve the public interest more effectively than sales for cash. Sefton Darr, president of the Bar Association, pointed out in naming his committee of inquiry that department stores and most of the city's other retail establishments, including many credit houses, are in no way connected with the abuses against which the campaign is aimed. The public must keep that distinction clearly in mind.

Only those unprincipled individuals who lure the unsuspecting into the signing of deceptive contracts, who virtually blackmail debtors and who exact outrageous interest and service charges, have anything to fear from the inquiry. Persons who have been swindled by these racketeers are asked to tell their experiences to the bar committee. When that group has obtained all the information needed to indicate the full range and extent of abuses in this field it will reexamine the law and court rules to determine what changes are desirable.

It is gratifying to see the Bar Association thus assuming the role of an active protector of the public against scheming sharpers. The investigating committee, under the chairmanship of George D. Horning, has a splendid opportunity to render this voteless community a service that it is prevented from performing for itself.

Raising Party Funds

In this election year, the Democratic National Committee has decided to make a direct appeal for contributions from party members, omitting all mention of the Jackson Day dinners which, in previous years, have been regarded as a lure to attract financial support.

Only in Washington are dinner invitations being mailed with the request for funds. And Washington, with its $100 "cover" charge, is the only city asking contributions in excess of an otherwise uniform $25 donation.

It is understood, however, that those who contribute the sums asked will later be presented with complimentary tickets to dinners to be held in places not yet designated. But the emphasis is being placed exclusively on the party's need of money to carry on the pre-election campaign.

Last year the Jackson Day dinners yielded a profit of about $400,000. This year the National Committee is seeking from $750,000 to $1,000,000 to carry it over to the date of the party convention. It is an open question whether the greater interest aroused by an impending election will bring the hoped-for increase in contributions.

Despite protestations to the contrary, it seems probable that the decision not to emphasize the Jackson Day dinners is due in large part to passage of the Hatch act. While that law does not prevent solicitation of funds from Federal employes, excepting those paid from relief funds, it does prohibit a wide range of partisan political activities and organized speech-making by Federal officials formerly conspicuous in party councils.

These recently imposed legal restrictions have, no doubt, dampened the enthusiasm of many politically minded officeholders for participation even in those party affairs still open to them. Furthermore, the Hatch act is likely to have an adverse effect upon the attendance at Jackson Day dinners of minor Federal employes relieved from a feeling of obligation to please official superiors by contributing to party campaign chests.

For obvious reasons the Washington dinner can be counted upon to be a success. The fact that it is scheduled to take place as usual suggests that the change in campaign methods is due in some measure to uncertainty regarding the response to appeals for funds in other parts of the country. By leaving details as to the number and location of the outside Jackson Day dinners for later determination, the Democratic National Committee will avoid possible embarrassment if contributions should fail to meet expectations.

The Reds Start West

Paradoxical though it seems, there is one redeeming feature in the Russian invasion of Finland. Now, at last, the real character of the Soviet regime is unmasked so all may see. Now the calculated immorality, the sickening hypocrisy, and the complete ruthlessness of Stalin and his associates are revealed beyond possibility of further deception. With the first bombs dropped on Helsinki the last pretense of Communist "liberalism" was blown to smithereens. Whatever the cost to the little Baltic republic, it is a gain for other countries to have the Communist character thus made clear.

In ordering the invasion of Poland, Hitler at least had a certain case. There is not even the shred of an excuse for the Russian aggression against Finland. Premier Molotoff's charges of Finnish threats to Leningrad—a city with a population greater than that of all Finland—is a fabrication too ludicrous to deceive any but his own ignorant and illiterate people. And the final proof of the wanton character of Russia's policy was given when Finland's offer to withdraw even defense guards from the border was followed immediately by Moscow's order to attack.

Going from Russia into Finland the traveler leaves a dirty primitive country, ruled by a fanatical terrorization, to enter a spotless and highly civilized democracy. The character of the buildings, the standards of the people, the sense of freedom and well being, all attest in a thousand different ways the immeasurable superiority of the Finns to their Russian neighbors. This was the case even in Czarist days, since when an emancipated Finland has made great progress while Communist Russia, in many respects, has slipped even further down the scale toward barbarism.

This brutal effort to obliterate a much higher culture will therefore bring even sharper reactions and more widespread hostility toward Russia than was created for Germany by that country's attack on Poland. And this resentment will be particularly pronounced in the United States, which is as sympathetic and friendly to the Finnish democracy as it is properly suspicious of the Russian dictatorship. There is already a widespread conviction that the country would welcome the final departure from Washington of Constantine Oumansky, the Soviet Ambassador. It is a conviction which the present policy of his government will greatly strengthen.

The Russians outnumber the Finns by nearly 60 to 1. But it is not certain that the conquest of the little country can be quickly accomplished. Man for man, the Scandinavian soldiers are of far higher intelligence and better quality than the Red army conscripts. For this reason Moscow will probably endeavor to break resistance by repeated bombings of civilian centers. Finland, however, is an agricultural country. Life is not centered in its small though beautiful towns. And the destruction of these is not likely to break the spirit of a people who know from experience what it is to be crushed under the Russian yoke.

Behind the Finnish defense, of course, lie vague and overshadowing problems of colossal magnitude. Of course the domination of this one inoffensive country is not the final goal of Soviet pressure. Through Finland the Russian aim is clearly to subjugate northern Sweden and Norway as well, thus bringing the Communist empire to the Atlantic at Narvik or some other northern port.

So, just three months after Hitler's troops marched into Poland, the war begins to spread. At first it may seem possible to witness a Russo-Finnish conflict independent of and separate from the struggle between Germany and the Allies. For a time American neutrality toward Russia's westward march may offer no more difficulties than those aroused by the German push to the east. But we may count ourselves very fortunate if the forces now unleashed can be thus circumscribed.

As Russia underwrote the German conquest of Poland, so Germany, undoubtedly, has given advance approval to the Russian campaign against Scandinavia. These are joint, not separate, actions. They further illustrate the magnitude of the current threat to western civilization.

"Basketball's Father"

Most great athletic games are not "invented" but develop by a kind of teleology until they achieve the perfection of design which thereafter distinguishes them. The "form" of baseball, for instance, is very different from that of cricket, but it is quite apparent that these two sports must have had some common ancestor—perhaps the old game of rounders.

One famous exception to this rule, however, is our flourishing game of basketball, whose creator, Dr. James A. Naismith, died the other day in Kansas. Basketball sprang full blown from the ingenious mind of Dr. Naismith, like Minerva from the brow of Jove. Save for a few modifications of the rules, and a considerable improvement of the equipment, the game of basketball is esentially the same as it was when Dr. Naismith knocked the bottoms out of a pair of peachbaskets in Springfield, Mass., nearly 50 years ago.

Of course it could be argued that if Dr. Naismith had never seen a game of association football with its dribbling, passing and fouling penalties, the general idea of basketball might never have suggested itself to his mind. (It is interesting to recall that a soccer ball was used in those earliest basketball games at Springfield.) Still, this would be almost like arguing that if mankind had never evolved into a biped there might never have been any game of soccer.

It has been estimated that today tens of millions of boys and girls, youths and maidens, are playing this game that Dr. Naismith made for them. Much of this popularity is doubtless due to the fact that basketball is chiefly an indoor game. Thus it provides opportunity for spectacular and dramatic team competitions in the season when field games become difficult or impossible.

Until recently, basketball was the only sport involving strenuous motion and collision that was equally popular with either sex. To be sure a more decorous variety of the game was devised for girl players. But in this amazonian age "girls' basketball" is becoming almost as quaint and archaic as beanbag or jackstones.

Promised Land

Current reports tell of a contemplated exodus—from the celebrated "Dutch country" of Pennsylvania into Southern Maryland—of the so-called Amish folk who, in common with other Mennonite groups, call themselves simply the Plain People. About 2,000 acres in St. Marys County have been acquired by these sectaries, and a half-dozen families are already established there. Many more families, it is said, are to migrate before the spring planting begins.

The chief reason given for this migration is the steadily rising value of the fat farming lands of Lancaster, York and one or two other Pennsylvania counties which have been the Amish habitat. To this value the Amish themselves, perhaps unwittingly and certainly unwillingly, have contributed much. The skill and industry of the Amish farmer have been proverbial for generations. Thus, as the cost of land in his native communities increased, it became harder and harder for him to establish his sons, as his religion insists he must, on farms of their own.

It is to be supposed, however, that this is but one of the factors which have led the Amish to so momentous a decision. Throughout two centuries of the most revolutionary changes in the history of the world the Amish have held with fierce tenacity to the peculiar culture, which still sets them apart, even in appearance, from all other Americans. Even today the strict or "House" Amish stubbornly eschew the use of buttons and leather belts, and such innovations as telephones, radios, automobiles and modern plumbing. The married men refuse to shave any part of their faces save the upper lips or to let their hair be touched by barbers.

Yet it is well known that the struggle of the elders to preserve such ways against the increasing encroachments of the outside world has grown more and more difficult. The increase of population has exposed the young to the ways of "world people" and to such allurements as the movies and the radio.

The growth of government paternalism has brought still other dangers. Two years ago members of the sect elected to go to jail rather than send their children to a consolidated public school built under a PWA grant; for the Amish must accept no alms, and government alms are no exception. The Amish won that fight but only by recourse to the lesser evil of litigation, which their tradition also forbids.

Thus it may be assumed that the Amish are again seeking, as they sought 250 years ago, for a place in which they may follow undisturbed their special way of life. Austere as it may be, that way should have much to commend it even in the eyes of a pleasure-loving modern world.

If for a half-dozen generations the Amish have set their faces against the many benefits of the industrial revolution, they have also escaped most of its larger evils. Hunger, poverty, unemployment and debt are unknown among them. If rugged economic independence and security are the gift of their special folkways, can they be criticized for wishing to preserve them?

The Chitterling Champion

From the Letter Column of the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser.

In a recent article Peter Brannon quotes a Northern woman's disparaging remarks about "home-prepared tripe." Perhaps the august lady was thinking of that delectable dish, chitterlings (also spelled chidlings or chitlings). Some time ago I heard an Army officer, who had long fattened on choice viands, say he would be quite willing to tackle a chitterling stretching from Montgomery to Prattville.

While this should be recorded as a remarkable gastronomic feat I heard of one which eclipses it. A native Alabamian asserted in no ambiguous terms he could eat one a mile long, mounted on a horse, and the horse going at a gallop . . . and this he could do, despite the fact that he might occasionally encounter a grain of corn.

Columnists' Blitzkrieg

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The rationalization of industry continues; the division of labor proceeds apace. Indeed, these tendencies now extend far beyond the prosaic realm of the manufacture of commodities—yea, now they invade the sacrosanctum of journalism itself. Shift by shift, well-paid but panicky columnists seek to manufacture public opinion out of the only raw materials they possess, hope and contumely.

Take your own Westbrook Pegler and Dorothy Thompson. What a division of labor is here! Pegler's specialty is to whip and malign the suffering aged, who need for their subsistence something more than mild climate. Miss Thompson, on the other hand, is an expert in spanking and castigating the unhappy youth of our country, who multiply her fears and anger by expressing their belief, in a Y. M. C. A. poll, "that ability no longer offers assurance of success in America."

I am expectantly awaiting the extension of this journalistic warfare; awaiting the real blitzkrieg, as it were. For surely some intrepid columnist has already been assigned the specific task of defaming the rest of our citizenry, of destroying the reputations of us who are neither old nor young. For have not we of this stratum fallen under dark suspicion by our unpatriotic failure to control the opinions of both our yearning children and our grasping parents?

And when this mighty journalistic enterprise is at last complete, then can all of us miserable wretches—130,000,000 strong—huddle together and weep that we have alienated public opinion by angering the sole manufacturers and dealers in genuine Americanism, the Peglers and Thompsons.

E. PLURIBUS UNUM.
Washington, Nov. 28.

"No Entangling Alliances"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Within the comparatively short span of 163 years, the United States has progressively grown to be one of the strongest nations of the world.

The inception of our freedom was engineered by a committee of American statesmen, whose names will be forever enshrined in the hearts of our countrymen: Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, Robert Livingston, John Adams and Roger Sherman. It is to these men we owe our Declaration of Independence.

But for it there would be no Constitution, no self-evident truths of equal rights, no liberty, no pursuit of happiness. In short, there would not be a United States of America.

Today, across the seas, the European citizen is oppressed, under tyrannical rule; short of liberty, initiative and self-respect. He is become the abject servant of the state, physically, mentally and morally. Such is the fate of man under dictatorial rule, which makes all its people directly subservient to the interest of the state.

Therefore, let it be firmly resolved that we will shun the overtures of designing belligerent nations who subtly attempt to draw us into a European war. The price the American people have paid to secure the blessings of democracy is too great to be relinquished without a determined effort to keep it so.

No entangling alliances for America! FRANK J. SALAMON.
Washington, Nov. 25.

The Evil That Whigs Do

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When Mr. Fred B. Woodard says that no great Democrat has arisen to dispute Webster or Lincoln, he might just as well say that the night does not follow the day.

The principles of Jefferson were violated by both Webster and Lincoln; the announced view of Patrick Henry was the opposite of Messrs. Webster and Lincoln, viz: "I want a clause in the Constitution which will prevent Massachusetts taxing Virginia," and Calhoun followed with precisely the same statement as to South Carolina.

Of course, what Jefferson, Henry and Calhoun were talking about was industry taxing agriculture. Jackson repressed the extreme views of Webster as well as Calhoun, and the result was a tariff for 10 or 12 years. The War Between the States would have occurred then, but the North was not ready. Among other things it needed the control of the Government and a so-called moral issue. Mr. Lincoln submitted as to the latter, but only as to slaves within the war zone.

However, Mr. Fred B. Woodard may think Jefferson, Henry, Jackson, Calhoun and R. E. Lee lacking in qualifications as "no great Democrats;" but Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Webster were Whigs. They believed in the principle and practiced the principle of "concentrating the fruits of the energies of the people along with the political control in the hands of the few." Messrs. Lincoln and Webster were the chief causes of 20,000,000 people in America being in want in the midst of plenty, 1929-39.

I do not agree with Mr. Roosevelt's packing of the court and neither have I agreed with the 75 years of court packing by the successors of the Whigs. One evil has brought another. I do not believe in the spending of money to the extent practiced by Mr. Roosevelt; but if he had not spent at least $10,000,000,000 to cure the evils of Whigism, as championed by Messrs. Webster and Lincoln, blood would have run in the gutters of the cities which had benefited from Whigism, but whose people failed to let the same "percolate" to the poorer men.

When Carter Glass, Bailey, Byrd, George et al. were fighting the attack on the court, they were not fighting for the principles of Webster and Lincoln. They had long fought the principles of those two and had just added an attack on the Roosevelt policy, which duplicated those of Lincoln and Webster. Mr. Roosevelt is much more akin to Webster and Lincoln in culture than he is to Glass, Byrd, Bailey, etc. In fact, it is impossible to distinguish between Lincoln and Roosevelt, and I do not believe in either.

Mr. Lincoln was a Whig. When we shall have heard the last of New Dealism, it will be discovered that one-sixth of the expenditures by Mr. Roosevelt are in the Federal Treasury, one-sixth will have done the public some good, two-thirds will be in the hands of people who never knew social responsibility, nor democracy.

Mr. Lincoln never was an abolitionist and never a Democrat. Mr. Lincoln was a Whig. The Whigs believed only in the concentration of the wealth of the Nation and the political power in the hands of the few. Don't let Mr. Woodward smear these Southerners who fought both heresies and all heretics. And Jefferson, Henry, Jackson, Calhoun and Lee were great Democrats.

GUY G. MOORE.
Washington, Nov. 24.

Whole Question

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Being a distant subscriber to The Washington Post, I have been reading the items regarding trucks, their use of highways, etc., and am constrained to believe that "some people think they think when they are simply rearranging their prejudices"—and that may apply to me. Who knows?

But, here is a thought; the railroads necessarily know more about transportation than any one or any set of persons in any kind of business; the main arteries of transportation over the entire country are already laid off and they consist of right of way on which is laid tracks constantly and efficiently supervised; along either side of the tracks are areas of land not in full use. There may be the place concrete causeways may be laid to carry trucks.

The railroads could add trucks to their service and other truck concerns may find a way to use these causeways like competitive railroads do by paying for the use of other railroads' right of way.

The length, width, and tonnage of trucks would then be regulated very simply. The truck journey would be accomplished with the aid of railroad dispatching, and without interference and hazard through the highway travel.

Sometimes we may think we know how to run other peoples business and very likely if I were entrusted with operating a truck line or a railroad I would not get to first base but I can ask:—are we interested in truck service, railroad service or are we concerned with the real, whole question—transportation? J. F. T.

Help The Allies

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: During these days when war clouds cover practically the whole of Europe, it behooves us of the United States to give thanks that we live in a land of plenty, enjoying freedom of speech and freedom of the press. No nation in the world is so democratic and no nation in the world can boast of so much freedom. We stand out to the world as a symbol of prosperity and freedom through democracy and it should be the aim of every true American citizen to see that we stay that way.

We are technically a neutral country and it is the hope of all that we can stay out of the present European war, but no one knows what the future holds, therefore, we can only live in the present, trusting that any turn of events will react favorably toward the Allies, for it is my personal opinion that the safety of our country, to a certain extent, lies in their success.

Oh, yes, we are told by many, including Gen. Johnson, that it is impossible for a foreign country to invade the United States, but what a different story it would be should Hitler or Stalin become possessors of any lands in the Americas now owned by any belligerent country.

However, the safety of one country should be our first concern and the first step in that direction was the repeal of the arms embargo, which is the only way a neutral country can in any way help a friendly one in war. For to bottle up our friends, and England and France are our friends, while the enemy country receives aid from others, is doing ourselves harm, in that we also fail to create an outlet for our materials.

President Roosevelt thinks that in keeping our ships at home, as the cash and carry system implies, it will help eliminate the probability of our getting into the war. Senator Carter Glass says our soldiers fought for our rights on the high seas in 1917 and to relinquish that right is dishonoring our dead. Be that as it may, I am one individual, and believe I represent many others with similar views, who thinks this country should do all it can for the Allies, in the hope that such help will keep us off the actual firing lines. MARY STEWART.

Majouba

After Teddy and I began to find the drudgery of keeping house in Fez too onerous, I mentioned our difficulties to Sidi Taib.

"Of course," he said, "sweeping and cooking are not occupations for men. If you like, I'll let you have Majouba."

"And who is Majouba?" I asked.

"Oh, she is one of my household," Sidi Taib replied airily, leaving me to conjecture whether she was a slave or merely a widowed poor relation. "There are too many in my house already." This I knew to be a fact, for Sidi Taib had the full Koranic quota of four wives. "You will find that she can cook well, and you can pay her five francs a day, if you think she is worth that much. I'll bring her over tomorow morning."

Sidi Taib came over the next morning, leading Majouba, who was attired in finery that would have filled the Queen of Sheba with envy. She was wearing all the clothes she owned, with the finest on top, after the Moorish fashion. She was encumbered with bracelets, rings and silken scarfs, and her fingertips were dyed with henna. About her ample waist she wore a girdle embroidered with gold and scarlet, and on her feet were babouch worked in brave, bright colors.

"Do not beat her," he cautioned us. "That is not fitting. Just tell me. There are those in my house who will punish her. And give her what money she wants for the shopping, but be sure to keep a record of it. Then I can look it over and see if she is spending too much."

He gave Majouba a long set of instructions, and we all went on a tour of the house to show Majouba through her new domain and to point out the things she was to do. Then, with a promise to come and eat with us the next day to see how Majouba was feeding us, Sidi Taib departed.

Majouba immediately retired to the kitchen, a little house all to itself at the bottom of the garden, and presently reappeared minus her finery, with her circumference greatly reduced. She had her skirts tucked into her belt, displaying a pair of bloomers that came to within a foot of her sturdy ankles, and at once set to work scrubbing the floors, a task that Teddy and I somehow had overlooked.

Teddy and I returned to our respective painting and writing, and we saw no more of Majouba till late in the morning, when she stood in the door and said "Floos," with an outstretched hand. I gave her a 10-franc note and made a great show of writing in the largest notebook I could find, "Dec. 4: Majouba, 10 fr." I tried to ask her what she was going to buy, but she pretended not to understand and went out.

For dinner she gave us a chicken, magically made tender and savory, some vegetables that we were not familiar with, and grapes and sweet cakes. We agreed that she could indeed cook.

And so Majouba became a part of our lives. She tended us with such care that we felt like hothouse exotics. She fed us the loveliest and strangest of foods, she kept our floors immaculate, she washed and darned our clothes, she dusted every object in the house, and she kept us supplied with piping hot tea at all hours of the day. She saved money for us, so that we lived richly on a third of what we had been accustomed to spend for food.

But she would not talk to us. Teddy and I tried to induce her to break her silence, but she pretended to understand nothing of our Arabic beyond the simple directions, which wounded my vanity. She would stand unobtrusively at the door and watch us with devouring eyes. One day I turned in the rough wooden tub we had improvised as a bath, to find Majouba standing in the doorway, watching me quite unabashed.

I mentioned this to Sidi Taib, and he roared with laughter. He called Majouba in and questioned her between guffaws.

"She says that she just wanted to see if her Christians (for so she calls you) were like Moslem men. And she says you are."

Then Sidi Taib told me how Majouba gloried in her Christians, telling great tales to his household about their outlandish ways, how they ate with things other than knives and cut their bread (a sacrilege in Moslem eyes) and touched their food with their left hands (a filthy act) and put on a different set of clothes to go to bed in. And Sidi Tedi spent the whole day putting colors on a big white square and Sidi Lahia (that was I) sat at a little machine and made black marks on papers.

And while they did these things, her Christians would often break into a wild howl and sing songs such as no Moslem had ever heard. To be connected with us gave Majouba great prestige, and Sidi Taib reported that she drove hard bargains in the markets by threatening to have her Christians put the evil eye on merchants who tried to charge too much.

It was I who disrupted this idyllic existence. Majouba had been in the habit of serving a foul brew for breakfast which she called "cawa" but which was like no coffee we had ever tasted. She pounded the coffee beans in a pestle till they were reduced to powder, and then she made a thick broth, boiling it till it was rank and bitter beyond belief. I rebelled and bought a real percolator in the Ville Nouvelle.

I introduced Majouba to the percolator, showed her how to fill it, and set it over the fire. Majouba watched with tolerant boredom (what would her Christians think of next?) till suddenly the percolator began to perk vigorously. She gave a scream of terror and fled from the house.

Presently Sidi Taib, ill at ease, showed up. "Majouba tells me," he said, "that you have a pot with a devil in it, and she is never coming back. What is this pot, and is there really a devil in it? My household is punishing her for telling such lies, but I should like very much to see the pot, just to explain to my household what it is all about."

Bioff's Last Refuge

PATRIOTISM has been called the last refuge of a scoundrel, and it may be added that in the case of Willie Bioff, the Chicago vicemonger, the labor movement is the last refuge of one who was convicted of being a parasite on a harlot working the back room of a Halsted street brothel. One day last week, during certain negotiations between Bioff and the Hollywood movie industry, he was confronted with his own record, which shows that he was either an employe or a proprietor of this dive and that in a specific case he received $20 which a prostitute named Rose had earned that day by entertaining 13 customers.

Bioff immediately raised a cry that his past had been raked up for no other purpose than to discredit him as representative of the co-called stagehands' union and thus to deprive the underpaid rank and file of an increase in wages. The fact is that the rank and file never elected Bioff to represent them. He muscled into the job as bodyguard and personal representative of George E. Browne, also of Chicago, the union president, who knew his record and who two years ago personally requested that nothing more be said about it in print. Browne's reasons for this request are apparent now.

Bioff Still Owes Most Of Sentence

BIOFF then owed and still owes all but eight days of a sentence of six months in the Chicago Bridewell for preying on a prostitute. I knew then that Bioff was a Chicago underworld character with a record of numerous arrests, but did not have proof of the conviction for pandering, and Browne explained that Willie, like many other neighborhood boys in Chicago, had merely been picked up by the police now and again and let go. That is not the case, however. Bioff was not a boy, but was 24 years old when he was convicted of pandering, and pandering is no such amiable mischief as soaping windows on Halloween or throwing snowballs.

Bioff further says that Joseph Schenck, president of the producers' association, and his associates on the employers' side of the wage dispute, were responsible for the expose, and accuses me of "running interference" for my "plutocratic friends in Hollywood," who are attacking him because he is "fighting for the little fellows in the studios, the workmen who are fortunate to average $900 a year."

Pegler Disclaims Personal Interest

I MET Schenck once, about two years ago, when I called at his office to discuss Bioff. Schenck refused to talk about him. I met Sam Goldwyn once about the same time, but did not discuss the labor problem of the studios. I met another producer named Harry Cohen, who made me an offer. He said that if I would write some scenarios he would read them. Then, if he liked them, he would buy them. We did no business. I met Walt Disney then and met him again two weeks ago. He is a personal friend. On this last trip I met no producers, but did see Gene Fowler, James K. McGuinness, Whitney Bolton and John McLain, writers; Bill Fields, the great tragedian, and Greg La Cava and Leo McCarey, directors. I own no stock in any movie company, never have sold a scenario, never have worked for any movie company except one four-week term as publicity writer about 1921 for a promoter who was producing a Babe Ruth film called "Headin' Home," and, on this recent trip, discussed Bioff only with Buron Fitts, the prosecutor of Los Angeles County, who had no information to offer.

None of the individuals here mentioned asked me to run interference against Bioff, and the initiative and responsibility were all my own. Carey McWilliams, a radical laborite, did have a few words to say about Bioff and his union, but McWilliams is C. I. O. and the C. I. O. in California is dominated by its Communist minorities, so it is not likely that I would feel any desire to run interference for him.

Fabulous Wealth In Labor Racket

"PEGLER MIGHT turn his truculent pen to better advantage by presenting the cause of the Hollywood workingmen, who, employed in an industry of fabulous wealth, are barely able to make a livelihood," says Bioff's statement.

And I would suggest that Bioff himself has found fabulous wealth in the labor racket representing those men who are barely able to make a livelihood. So much has been said about an item of $100,000 cash which Bioff received from a representative of the employers after he had negotiated a contract with them in 1937 that the nobly altruistic Chicago vicemonger owes a duty to himself and to the "little fellows" for whom he speaks so touchingly, to explain all and explain well. Later it was called a loan. Now I'll tell one.

Labor, the "little fellows," suffer from racketeering in the unions, from exploitation and sellouts by muscle men of the Chicago type as well as from the stupidity and greed of employers.

Bioff's own union, for example, in one local, had the effrontery to demand of American citizens applying for membership an initiation fee of $3,000, plus an income tax.

Mr. Kuhn And Leadership Principle

THE MOST important thing about the Kuhn case is that an American jury has rejected one interpretation of the leadership principle as being contrary to American law, even when exercised in private organizations.

No member of the bund complained about the way Mr. Kuhn used its funds. On the contrary, member after member testified that, under the leadership principle, Mr. Kuhn had the right to use the funds of the bund as he chose. If he chose to use money to transport Mrs. Camp's furniture, why Mrs. Camp was probably useful to him, and useful to the bund, and that was all right as far as the members were concerned. It was their money that he was using, and they were satisfied with the way he used it.

This was not the attitude of the State. Judge Wallace, in his instructions on Wednesday, pointed out that in the view of the State the bund or any other organization, might operate under the "leadership principle," but that this principle, though it might give the leader wide powers, did not give him unlimited powers.

Defense Claimed Kuhn Owned Bund

DEFENSE COUNSEL for Mr. Kuhn held that Kuhn was supreme in the bund, even to the point of owning it.

So the issue was whether Kuhn owned the bund, and was therefore entitled to use its funds for his personal purposes, or whether he was trustee for the bund. If he were owner, no charges could be found against him. If he were trustee, then the jury would have to consider whether his use of the trusteeship was legitimate.

Now, no matter what the defense counsel might argue, there was evidence that Mr. Kuhn considered himself trustee rather than owner. There was, for instance, the little matter of his falsifying the books. If he owned the bund and had the rights the members claimed, why did he attempt to conceal certain expenditures from the members? Why did he enter payments that he never made, and avoid entering other payments that he did make?

Under the totalitarian leadership principle, even this, I suppose, is allowable, on the ground that it is not good for people to know everything.

Certainly in the totalitarian states, and notably in Mr. Kuhn's beloved Nazi-land and in Soviet Russia, the leaders go on the principle that they own everything. I don't know, for instance, whether there was any possible legal interference with the decision to present Field Marshal Goering with some of the art treasures of the German public museums.

But the decision of Wednesday's jury indicates that in the United States even private organizations cannot hand over unlimited powers to the leader, unless they do so officially and constitutionally. And this the bund did not do, and it is questionable whether the members of any organization would bring themselves to do so—whether they would put an item in an organization's constitution to the effect that money collected by the members is henceforth the personal property of the leader! Even in totalitarian states, totalitarianism proceeds by encroachment.

Judge Holds Crimes Are Against State

JUDGE WALLACE also charged: "It is often stated, erroneously, that crimes are committed against individuals. That is not so. Crimes are committed against the state."

The charges against Kuhn were, therefore, preferred in behalf of society, or the state, against the leader of the bund, whose members were protected thereby against their own wishes. The crime was embezzlement. Mr. Kuhn was not tried for his political activities.

A similar attitude has been taken in cases involving racketeers. For instance, in the Tootsie Herbert case. Tootsie Herbert was the leader of a racketeer trade union. None of the members of this union complained against Tootsie Herbert. In this case there was very good evidence that one reason they did not complain was that they were being terrorized. The state, however, proceeded on its own initiative against Tootsie, and charged him with diversion of funds.

In the case of the bund, there was no evidence that the members were terrorized. Perhaps they are; certainly German-Americans with relatives in Germany are extremely cautious in critiolzing Nazi activities here, or anywhere else, for fear revenge will be taken on members of their families. The Dies Committee has brought out testimony to support this, and so did the Nazi spy case. But such facts were part of this trial.

There is no evidence, furthermore, that Mr. Kuhn committed any crime against the State as the State. He embezzled no funds from any public offices. His crime was against the members of the bund and against them alone, and they did not consider it a crime. At least after the fact, they gave him the powers. The judgment of the jury means that such powers must be specifically granted. They are not implied. His administration of the bund, therefore, was racketeering, whether he exercised terror or not.

Members Reluctant To Press Charges

I SHOULD THINK that this case would have very widespread possible repercussions. For the fact is that the diversion of funds, for purposes never intended by the membership of organizations, and of doubtful legitimacy, goes on constantly. It goes on, for instance, in certain trade unions not considered as rackets, and goes on in all sorts of organizations formed from public subscriptions.

This is often made possible by divided loyalties. The members of an organization may be dissatisfied with the way its affairs are being run, or they may be kept in total ignorance of those affairs—that is oftener the case—and yet they may not wish public investigations because they fear that such investigations would play into the hands of opponents of the organization with whose essential purposes the members are in agreement.

This certainly is the case with the Communist Party. I have said it before, and I say it again, that if a public accounting were ever forced of the sources and uses of the funds that pass through the Communist Party and kindred organizations allied with it, incredible shenanigans would be revealed. Communists, however, will not press charges. Even if they are personally disturbed, they will defend the party and its leaders.

Interference Has Certain Menaces

ON THE OTHER hand, to encourage district attorneys to interfere in any organizations that they may suspect has certain menaces of its own.

Therefore, it would seem that certain requirements ought to be made in law of all organizations soliciting funds or members from the public. The sources of funds and regular accountings by outside accountants ought to be made public as normal procedure. Members of an organization, if they are to accept a totalitarian leadership principle, ought to know, from the outset, that they exist outside such regulations and that, therefore, they are unprotected, are not a legitimate organization at all, but are merely making personal subscriptions to a personal leader in whom they have unlimited trust.

If people want to give the Kuhns of this world part of their hard-earned money for their own purposes I don't suppose anyone has or should have the right to stop them. But in that case they are not joining an organization, but a personal following.

I am interested to know how the decision in the Kuhn case might affect certain other leaders in this country — for instance, Father Coughlin; for instance, Father Divine.

Britain Learns Operation Of German Magnetic Mines

Explosives Set Off by Electric Action And by Propeller Sounds; England Devising Ways to Sweep Her Seas

By John G. Norris.

The British have discovered the secret of the magnetic mines which caused so much damage to shipping in the English Channel and believe they can neutralize them, official circles here have been informed.

After many dangerous attempts Allied minesweepers managed to raise several of the mines intact, and have turned them over to admiralty experts for study, reports received by this Government state.

The "wild" mines were revealed to have a double-barreled character, one drum of explosives being set off by the magnetic effect of the steel hull of a ship passing over it, and the other by acoustic action of the vessel's propellers. Sound vibrations from the propeller blades, it is said, trip the trigger of this half of the mine.

Tests Show Where to Sweep

By tests, Britain's mine experts can determine the most nearly certain way of setting off the submerged weapons and then clean out ship channels and keep them patrolled, it is said.

The process of "cleaning out" the mine beds, the reports indicated, might involve towing unoccupied boats back and forth over the areas. In this operation the craft would carry or drag below the surface the proper quantity and type of metal which has been found will most surely detonate the mines.

In a somewhat similar manner, the "acoustic" mines could be exploded and ship channels cleared of their lurking peril. Under-water sound vibrations, attuned to the mine firing mechanism, could be sent through the beds, setting off all charges, it is said.

Energy Rays Suggested

Another suggestion was that energy rays might be utilized. Ordnance experts thought the firing mechanisms of mines, sensitive enough to be set off by sound waves or magnetism, might react to some form of energy ray.

The reports made it plain that conventional mine-sweeping methods such as have been used to combat the older horned or antenna mines will not remove the new type.

The mines were placed on the ocean's bed rather than cast adrift or anchored at carying distances below the surface, it was said. When the magnetic or sound effect of a ship set off the firing mechanism, the mine exploded and the terrific under-water pressure caved in the vessel's hull.

Political Scene Shifts

By Ernest K. Lindley

Democratic Victory Now Forecast

A DRASTIC alteration in the political outlook for 1940 during the last seven months is registered in the poll of 50 leading Washington correspondents published in the current issue of Newsweek.

Last April these correspondents forecast a Republican victory by a vote of 2-1. Now, by 2-1, they expect a Democratic victory. (In justice, it must be emphasized that in both polls most of the answers were qualified. Probably few answers came from settled convictions. Nevertheless, they reveal an important shift.)

Last April only 11 of these correspondents thought Franklin D. Roosevelt was the most probable Democratic Presidential nominee. Of those 11 only 3 predicted that if nominated he would win in November.

Now 25, exactly half of those polled, think he is the most probable Democratic nominee. Of those 25, 21 think that if renominated he would be reelected. In addition, seven other correspondents consider his renomination sufficiently probable to name him as their second guess, and four of the seven think he could be elected for a third term.

Vandenberg Gains As G. O. P. Nominee

EXACTLY HALF of the correspondents pick Senator Vandenberg as their first guess for the Republican Presidential nomination. Last April only two thought he was the most probable nominee. Senator Taft is the first guess of 16. Dewey, who led the field in April, has dropped to a poor third. Only 4 correspondents put him down as their first guess this time, as against 23 in April.

Dewey, at the same time, has gained ground as a Vice Presidential probability, in the view of the correspondents. Their answers point to either Vandenberg and Dewey or Taft and Dewey as the Republican ticket.

On the Democratic side, the most decided changes, apart from the rise of Roosevelt, are the decline of Vice President Garner and the improvement of Paul V. McNutt's position. Last April this poll put Garner at the head of the list, even above Roosevelt, 17 correspondents naming him first and 7 naming him second. Now only six put him first and only one puts him second.

McNutt was not the first guess of a single correspondent in the poll of last April, although five put him second. Now 12 put him first and 20 name him as their second guess. As a result he ends up a strong second to Roosevelt.

Secretary Hull is a fair third, where he stood last spring. Jim Farley, Senator Wheeler, Senator Clark, of Missouri, Supreme Court Justice Douglas and Senator Tydings, trail, as the second guess of a few correspondents.

Farley, McNutt Lead Democrats

FOR THE DEMOCRATIC Vice Presidential nominee, Farley and McNutt run neck and neck at the top of the list, with various others trailing at considerable distances. Senator Clark has dropped way down since April, while Gov. Stark of Missouri has come up to fifth place on the Vice Presidential list.

Few, if any, of these correspondents would claim to have divinely prophetic powers. But all are experienced observers of the political scene, who keep in close contact with active politicians. As forecasters most of them may be wrong and some of them are sure to be. But their combined views are an honest and valuable appraisal of the 1940 outlook from the vantage point of Washington in November, 1939.

If Roosevelt is removed, and the second guesses of the correspondents who named him first are counted as first guesses, McNutt takes a commanding lead with 27 first place votes. Hull follows with 12. Garner gets a total of 7; Wheeler 2, Farley 1 and Douglas 1.

It is clear that a great majority of these correspondents believe that Roosevelt will control the Democratic National Convention. At least half think he can renominate himself. Seven others think his renomination is at least a definite possibility. This appraisal of Roosevelt's strength is reflected, also, in the decline of Garner and Bennett Clark, to both of whom he is known to be opposed.

Few New Dealers Seen With Chance

AT THE SAME time few of the correspondents think Roosevelt can bring about the nomination of any of his inner circle of New Deal advisers. Only one, Douglas, receives a single mention for first place.

The vast improvement in McNutt's chances shown in the poll undoubtedly is intertwined with the belief that McNutt would be acceptable to Roosevelt—not necessarily that McNutt already has been designated as Roosevelt's heir, which he has not.

The rise in Roosevelt's influence seen by the correspondents has come since the outbreak of war in Europe. So has the rise of Vandenberg, largely at the expense of Dewey—indicating a belief that in these troublous times the Republicans will call upon an experienced man who has closely followed foreign affairs as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and who, in addition, is conspicuously committed against involvement in the European war.

The President and the various delegates to the two national conventions may have other plans, but there, for what it is worth, is a thumb-nail summary of well-informed opinion in Washington today.

Accident Toll Rises Sharply In October

Chicago, Nov. 30 (AP). — Only prompt improvement in walking and driving habits can head off a national traffic death toll for 1939 greater than last year's.

The National Safety Council reported today the accident trend took a turn for the worse in October, and that if it continued through December the 2 per cent saving in lives for the first 10 months of 1939 would be wiped out.

The council began a nation-wide year-end safety campaign designed to reduce the December traffic toll.

October deaths numbered 3,410, compared with 3,280 last year. The 10-month total was 25,650 compared with 26,090 for the same period of 1938.

The War Spreads

By Barnet Nover

The Russian Invasion Of Finland

FROM SEPTEMBER 3 to November 30 the war in Europe actively involved only four nations—Great Britain, France, Germany and Poland.

During these 12½ weeks the dikes of peace and neutrality remained unbroken everywhere in that vast peripheral zone extending all the way from the Scandinavian nations and the Baltic republics in the north to the low countries, Spain and Portugal, in the west and the Balkan states in the south.

During that period Russia also was "neutral," at least to the extent of remaining more or less aloof from the German-British-French struggle. But while her invasion of Poland was a relatively bloodless affair it was indubitably an act of aggression. And it was followed by Russian participation in the partition of the conquered nation.

BY ATTACKING FINLAND, Russia has extended the war beyond the limits that obtained during these last 12 weeks. And there is no telling how wide an area the flood waters released by the breaking of the Finnish dike will ultimately cover. For if there is any certainty in the world it is that Russia will not stop with the conquest of Finland any more than she stopped with the annexation of two-fifths of Poland or the establishment of protectorates over Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania.

Having embarked on a policy of naked imperialism the Kremlin is certain to follow the logic of this course to its inevitable conclusion. Which means the war in Europe is now certain to spread and may, before very long, engulf all of that dark continent.

"IF YOU TAKE the first step," said Kipling of another military adventure, "you will take the last."

The truth of this is borne out by Russia's present course. The attack on Finland stems directly and almost inevitably from the deal which Stalin made with Hitler on that August day of 1939 which history may record as the dividing point between eras.

Russia, even by the most liberal standards, is no "have not" state. She lacks neither land nor population nor resources. Her ruthless imperialism cannot be explained by Marxist or post-Marxist cliches. Nor does it contribute to understanding to argue that the assault on Finland, barbarous and cowardly as it undoubtedly is, is solely the product of Stalinist sadism.

The Stalinist system has been guilty of plenty of sadistic practices. That is true of all states where terror is the principal instrument of government. But sadism does not explain why the Bolshevik dictator found it necessary, at this time, to extend the application of terrorist methods from the domestic to the foreign sphere. The record certainly shows that he avoided doing so for years after he came into power.

STALIN took the first step on the road to aggression, imperialism and, it may be, ruin, when he made his deal with Hitler.

In doing so Stalin burned all those bridges behind him which he and his associates had so carefully built over a period of years—the League bridge, the collective security bridge, the anti-Fascist bridge, the insistence on collaboration with the western democracies. Henceforth Russia must reckon on isolation and the penalties of isolation. For while cooperation with Germany is feasible as long as Germany is at war it is not likely to survive the war unless Germany, in the meantime, becomes in name as well as in fact a Bolshevik state. And if it does the center of the Communist world will, in the very nature of things, move from Moscow to Berlin.

STALIN probably believed as Hitler no doubt did, that Great Britain and France would not come to Poland's defense or, if they did, that they would make peace once the conquest of Poland had been achieved.

The refusal of the Allies to make peace has thus upset all of his calculations. He can no longer reckon on a state of affairs in which Germany and the Anglo-French combination would offset each other with Russia holding the balance of power. Now Russia must consider the possibility of a decisive victory of one side or the other. And such a decisive victory either by Germany or the Allies would be unpalatable to Moscow.

This helps explain Russia's haste in seeking an aimed showdown with Finland, a nation with a population about a sixtieth that of the Soviet Union. Finland occupies a key position, so far as Russia's present ambitions are concerned. On the one hand she controls the Aaland Islands, which are astride the strategically invaluable route from the Swedish ore mines to Germany. On the other hand Finland contains ice-free Arctic ports which may serve as naval bases for a Russian fleet ultimately capable of challenging British sea power.

By that very token, therefore, Russia, if successful in its Finnish venture, will not stop with that conquest no more than Hitler stopped with Austria or Czecho-Slovakia, or Japan stopped when she had acquired Manchuria.

When a nation begins to consider foreign policy wholly in strategic terms there is no end to its territorial ambitions. But in ruthlessly ignoring all moral considerations, and acting like a bully and brute the Soviet Union may be paving the way for its own destruction.

In the meantime every neutral nation in Europe is now under notice that neutrality is no defense against invasion. Today it is Finland's turn; tomorrow it may be Sweden's; the day after Rumania's and so on down the list.

The brute spirit is on the rampage. It cannot be confined. It will either destroy itself or destroy civilization. And it has already gone a long way in the latter direction.

The marriage of Billy Rose and Eleanor Holm was poorly described by the press. A writer with imagination would have observed somewhere about the premises Cupid in a swim suit and sombrero. In the background he would have seen Romance blowing a bugle, oiling a cash register and testing out a new springboard . . . and, as through a haze, he would have noticed, perhaps, Justice Pecora, arm in arm with Aphrodite and a newsreel mogul . . . while careful observation would have revealed Ben Bernie, officiating as best man, in red, white and blue trunks. D.C. 'Cabinet' Goes Over Seal Plan

Expected to Get Recommendations Of Commissioners In Toto Today

The District Commissioners yesterday began with their "kitchen cabinet" a thorough going over of the Seal reorganization plan which was attacked on many fronts at public hearings earlier this week.

They will continue the work today in Commissioner Hazen's office. It is expected the commissioners' recommendation for revamping the Seal plan will be completed today. The cabinet will then rewrite the entire bill for the commissioners, who will then submit their plans along with their criticisms of the Griffenhagen proposals.

Probable Recommendations

Although the commissioners would not reveal what changes will be made, it is expected they will:

Retain the Department of Vehicles and Traffic, which would have been abolished under the Seal proposals.

Retain Health Department control over the municipal hospitals, which under the plan would have been transferred to the Board of Public Welfare.

Refuse to abolish the Board of Tax Appeals because of the demand by the civic and professional groups at the hearings to preserve the board's independence.

Recommend the retention of the Board of Commissioners.

Suffrage Plan Unlikely

Although the hearings brought forth almost universal demands for suffrage, it is held unlikely the commissioners will include this item in their final reorganization bill.

The Griffenhagen plan would have set up a city manager to head the District government. This, it is believed, the commissioners will oppose.

Consideration will also be given to a revised form of a proposed Board of Civil Service Appeals. As proposed by Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal, the board would have contained three District officials and two employes of the District. Many groups demanded an equal number of employes on the board.

Meeting yesterday with the Commissioners were Corporation Counsel Seal; District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan; Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, Director of Highways, and Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, who make up the kitchen cabinet.

Traffic Victim Dies; 6 Hurt In D. C. Area

One man was dead yesterday and at least six persons were injured on highways in and near the District. The death was the seventy-seventh in traffic here this year.

Henry Carter, colored, 57, of 114 N place southeast, died at Gallinger of injuries received October 29 when he was struck at M street and New Jersey avenue southeast by an automobile police said was operated by Clarence I. Brooks, colored, 35, of 624 M street southeast.

Auto Leaves Highway

Lee J. Kistler, 31, and his wife, Mrs. Lennetta Kistler, 31, of 1429 East Capitol street, were injured when their automobile left Defense Highway near the Peace Cross. Mrs. Kistler was admitted to Casualty Hospital with face cuts and a possible spinal injury. Kistler was released after treatment for face cuts.

On his way home from school, Charles Miller, 7, of Clinton, Md., suffered fractures of both legs when he was struck by an automobile near his home. Police said he had walked around the rear of the school bus. At Providence Hospital his condition was said to be serious. Elmer Dyson, 22, of Clinton, was charged with failing to stop for a school bus.

Two Women Hurt

Annie Makin, 50, of Brookline, Mass., and Anna Makin, 40, of Newton, Mass., were injured when their automobile was in collision with another near Savage, Md. Both were at Garfield Hospital last night, the former with head and spine injuries, the latter with an injured right shoulder.

Hayes Friday, colored, 18, of 61 Fenton place northwest, was treated at Providence Hospital for leg injuries after being struck by an automobile while crossing at South Capitol and Canal streets southeast. He was returned home.

Older Boys Conference Opens Today in D. C.

More than 200 delegates to the annual Older Boys Conference of Maryland, Delaware and the District will register today at the Central Y. M. C. A. in preparation of the opening conference dinner at 6 p. m. in the Lutheran Church of the Reformation.

The Rev. Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor, will speak on "Effective Christian Living," and E. P. Hardell, coach at Georgetown University, will speak on "Sportsmanship." The conference will continue through Sunday morning.

Tax on Field Estate Appealed by Executors

Appeal from the Treasury's claim that the estate of Mrs. Delia S. Field, who died here July 23, 1937, owes $244,554 in estate taxes was taken yesterday by the executors to the Tax Appeals Board. Mrs. Field was the widow of Marshall Field, Chicago merchant.

The National Savings and Trust Co., and Catherine S. Beverside, executors, contended the value of the estate was overestimated.

Our Town:

Washington's Negro Population, a Model For U. S., Faces Major Housing Problem

D. C. Colored Have Fine University and Own School System

By Christine Sadler

One of the several ways in which Washington differs from other cities is in the large percentage and distinctive characteristics of its colored population.

Among cities of comparative size only New Orleans can equal its 27-to-73 ratio of colored and white inhabitants. Yet this city, despite its many colored communities, has no Harlems, no Beale streets, no Cat Fish rows.

In Howard University it has the "largest and most completely developed Negro institution of higher learning in the world, yet it has no jubilee singers such as Nashville brags about, nor any Carver working such dramatic wonders as go on at Tuskegee.

Model for Nation

Indeed, Washington's colored population is not "Southern." Nor is it "Northern." Like the city itself—only more so—it is the overlapping of both, the model for both, containing some of the best of both, and some of the worst.

The same can be said, of course, for the white population—and in about the same proportion. The "typical Washington Negro" is just as mythical a person as the often-spoken-about but rarely seen "real Washingtonian."

On the one hand there is Howard, which comprises "the largest community of Negro scholars in the world," and on the other there are the rural reliefers who have floated in looking for work, although Washington grows neither cotton nor corn.

125 Years of Freedom

On the one hand there are highly respected colored churches, with records in good order back for 100 and 125 years, and on the other there are the inhabited alleys with high disease and delinquency rates.

Generalizations do not fit the picture. Some of the city's oldest colored families have more than 125 years of freedom, literacy, and economic stability behind them. Others have arrived since the depression years, bringing less than an extra suit of clothes.

Housing Is the Problem

The major problem of the colored population in this city, however, does not need a generalization to cover it. It is specific, and it is housing. All over town one runs into it and both white and colored civic leaders are in agreement as to its importance.

It began, as Sterling A. Brown, Howard professor, points out in his WPA research writing project, with the great influx of contraband colored families during the Civil War. It gained momentum in the postwar period, when the alley system as the city now knows it was instituted and "shacks costing as little as $10 proved highly profitable investments." In 1897, Brown says, there were 333 alleys in Washington inhabited by approximately 19,000 persons, almost all of them colored.

While the situation has been improved in some respects, it has been aggravated in others. Until very recent years there was no building done at all in Washington exclusively for colored families. Whether they wished it or not, they had to take the old houses discarded by whites.

During the war they were settled around the string of forts that protected the city, as well as in the alleys, in the old "brick Capitol," in settlements flung up on the town's fringes. Many of them acquired property around the old fort sites, and still possess it.

This settling all over the District in small groups had both advantages and disadvantages. Anyway, it has made part of the housing problem. The shifting that has gone on since has not been planned, but usually forced by necessity.

Today, the shifting is accentuated as the city begins a belated solution of slums and alleys. In the development of projects such as Langston terrace and the Alley Dwelling Authority rehousings the leaders see an eventual solution.

Apartments Built

For colored families the ADA has built Hopkins place, Williston Apartments, St. Mary's Apartments, and an 18-house development on V street. In the immediate future are the Howard University project, which will cover approximately three blocks and provide homes for over 200 families; the Navy Yard project, which will cover nearly six blocks and house probably 300 families, and a 30-acre project out on Alabama avenue over in the Southeast beyond Saint Elizabeth's Hospital.

Applications for three additional projects to house 600 families already have been made. These, with the private building now taking hold, promise a brighter future, although there must be much reshifting yet of both colored and white families before the ends are obtained.

Charles M. Thomas, president of the Federation of Civic Associations and an outstanding leader in the effort to get the District's colored people to assume responsibility for their own elevation, long has called attention to the housing problem and to the additional burden that the constant oncoming of poor rural families brings. More than 25 groups of 1,500 members make up his community-conscious organization.

Edward H. Lawson, teacher and writer, is among those who point out that the ratio between colored and white families remains about the same in the District, with the percentage of colored probably going down during the depression rather than up. Those who think otherwise—and the facts will be out with the 1940 census—are inclined to forget the terrific growth of the city under the New Deal.

It is interesting to note that Washington has two separate school systems because the colored families asked for it. Under the system, approximately one-third of the educational appropriation goes to colored schools. They have their own teachers, paid and promoted just as the white teachers are, their own teachers' college, and in able Garnet C. Wilkinson their own assistant superintendent of schools. This is supposed to be the most equitable setup in the Nation, especially as far as jobs for the teachers are concerned.

Long, Honorable Record

Outstanding among homes, museums, and headquarters belonging to Washington's colored residents is the Frederick Douglass Memorial Home on a hill in Anacostia. Douglass, Lincoln's friend and adviser, ranks higher among many Washingtonians than does Booker T. Washington and his home contains many valuable documents.

Historically, the colored population in Washington has a long and honorable record. Benjamin Bannecker, a Negro mathematician, was appointed by Washington to help Maj. L'Enfant survey the city. As early as 1830 more than half the colored residents were free citizens. In 1860, there were 11,131 free colored persons in Washington, to 3,185 slaves.

Father Saves Sons From Flames

Joseph R. Davis, 30-year-old cab driver, last night carried his two young sons to safety when smoke and flames shot out from the walls of his apartment at 6012 Ridge Drive, Brookmont, Md. The fire, believed to have been the result of defective wiring, did damage estimated at $500 on the upper floor of the two-story stucco-surface building. Davis and his wife, Kathleen, were uninjured. Their children are Robert, 4, and Dale, 2

Awards Are Given To 14 Federal Architects Here

Fourteen architects last night received medals and certificates for outstanding work displayed at the eighth annual exhibition of the Association of Federal Architects.

The association's medal for the highest quality of architectural work in the last year was presented to the construction division of the Army Quartermaster General's office. Brig. Gen. A. Owen Seaman, chief of the division, accepted the medal in ceremonies after a dinner in the Raleigh Hotel. Honorable mention went to the Bureau of Yard and Docks, Navy Department.

Individual architects honored were R. E. Collins, Howard A. Page, Walter J. V. Litwin, John P. Morgan and Rembert Gary Allen, Navy Department; Vernon Duckett, Bertram L. Keyes and B. Mion, War Department; A. K. Bell and Max Lemke, Federal Works Agency; R. C. Holt, R. A. Coatsworth and R. V. Stewart, Veterans' Administration, and L. C. Darnet, Agriculture Department.

The awards were presented by Karl W. Hartig, of the Navy Department, association vice president.

Sousa Bridge To Be Opened December 9

District Officials Asked to Assist in Ceremonies at Span Over Anacostia

The first part of the new John Philip Sousa Memorial Bridge will be opened to traffic on the afternoon of Saturday, December 9, with band music and oratory, giving a festive flourish to the occasion.

District Commissioners and other officials have been asked to take part in the program at 2:30 that afternoon, marking a major stage in the replacement of the old Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge across Anacostia River.

At the west end of the bridge the ribbon will be cut by 9-year-old Nancy Lee, daughter of Adelbert W. Lee, vice president of the Southeast Business Men's Association, president of Randle Highlands Citizens Association, and general chairman for the ceremony.

Representatives from all citizens associations and businessmen's associations in Southeast Washington are joining in plans for the event.

Marine Band to Play

The Marine Band is expected to play in tribute to the conductor and composer whose name is so closely connected with its own. As a lad of 14, Sousa became a Marine Band drummer, when his father, Antonio Sousa, was a musician in the famous musical aggregation. Then, in 1880, the younger Sousa became leader of the band, a post he held with distinction 12 years, leaving in 1892 to form his own organization.

The program planned for December 9, however, will be "a simple ceremony," the committee said. A more ambitious ceremony, probably lasting all day, will be staged about a year from now, when the bridge is completed.

For the forthcoming ceremony, William A. Maio, past president of the Southeast Conference of Citizen's Associations, is vice chairman, and J. Louis Gelbman, president of Congress Heights Citizens Association, secretary.

Head Arrangements

Vernis Absher, one of the Southeast leaders who pushed efforts to obtain the appropriation for the new bridge, is chairman of the police committee.

George C. Shinn, chairman of the bridge committee of the Washington Board of Trade, is chairman of the speakers' committee. Maio is chairman of the invitation committee.

The program is in charge of Arthur Shaffer, president of the Southeast Business Men's Association. Music is being arranged by Capt. Joseph Morgan, of No. 5 Police Precinct, and retired Police Capt. Frank M. Dent. Gelbman is serving as chairman of the finance committee.

Jury Convicts Man in Attack

Robert Smith, 36, colored, who was rearrested and placed on trial for rape after the District Jail released him by mistake, was convicted last night by a District Court jury after four hours' deliberation.

Although the death penalty was withheld, Smith faces a maximum prison term of 30 years, court officials said. He will be sentenced next week.

America's Poet:

The poet of America talked to 1,000 persons in the Roosevelt High School last night about the people. Carl Sandburg, biographer of Lincoln, compiler of "The American Songbag," author of "The People, Yes," was presented by Sigma Tau Delta, English fraternity of Wilson Teachers College.

He talked about the Librarian of Congress and about the sit-down strike in Flint, Mich., and about Abraham Lincoln; he talked about words, and wars; he read his own poetry and sang folksongs with a guitar. His penetrating, delayed-action with caught the audience off-guard; they laughed, and then sometimes became grave when they saw his meaning, and applauded instead.

But his talk was about the people: "they give all they've got and they take what they get and they ask no questions and what more do you want?" He said, "the people will live on . . . you can't laugh off their capacity to take it." And, "the people know what the land knows . . . what is the symbol of the people unless it is the sea?"

He kept his audience waiting more than a half hour, and when he arrived his books and papers and his guitar were locked in the car and he couldn't get them out. But the audience waited, and one of them lent him a copy of "The People, Yes," and while he was talking his guitar appeared on the stage.

He stood in one spot for an hour and 20 minutes, his feet close together, his hands folded quietly, his white hair smooth; and his only movement was to turn his head and shoulders to face first one side of the audience, then the other.

"There is something vastly monumental about the stupid man," he said, quoting the Finnish musician Sibelius. "All the powers in the heavens and under the earth couldn't put a new idea in his head."

And so the "fear . . . and hysteria, in some quarters" that attacked the Librarian of Congress as a Red, that requires teachers to take an oath of loyalty to the Constitution in 21 States, that thinks our textbooks are loaded with dynamite, is unnecessary, he said. Young people's minds are not "waxen."

He read from "The People, Yes," which he called "a footnote to the Gettysburg speech of Lincoln's," and added, "if I read it all and omitted none, we would all be here at half-past twelve."

He read of the little girl, who wanted to know what soldiers were, and when she was told, she said, "some time they'll give a war and nobody will come."

The audience applauded, and then he said, loudly, indignantly, "I can read that line tonight; the moment we go on a war basis I couldn't!" And the audience laughed; and then they clapped. He went on, more indignantly, "The moment that war was declared and I read that it would be the hoosegow for me!" And the audience laughed again; and then they clapped again.

So he went on, "What sort of a liar are you? . . . the liar comes to believe his own lies . . . better leave the child's nose dirty than wring it off . . ." the accumulated proverbs of American folk. "I'm not arguing, I'm telling you."

At the close the long line formed for autographs. Helen Herfurth, president of Sigma Tau Delta, who had introduced him, got the first.

Citizens Urge Conduit Road Development

Land Subdivision, Library, Boulevard Improvements Are Asked for Section

A widespread building program involving land subdivision, construction of a new branch library and boulevard improvements was envisioned last night at a meeting of the Conduit Road Citizens Association.

Capt. Ellis R. King, past president of the unit, predicted the intensive development of the section at the harvest homecoming meeting of the group, devoted to future plans of the organization.

Capt. King described plans already sanctioned by Congress for routing the Potomac River Parkway through the section via Potomac avenue. The projected Fort drive also will circle through the section, he pointed out, with Fort Campbell one of its terminals.

The new thoroughfares assure a real estate and housing boom of considerable proportions, as is evidenced by the 33 per cent increase in value of real property in the Conduit road section last year, King declared.

A feature of the development, he said, will be the construction of a branch library to replace the 79-year-old structure at Conduit road and Nebraska avenue. This will be necessary, since the projected Fort Drive is to pass through the intersection. The replacement has been agreed to by District Librarian George F. Bowerman, King asserted.

The speaker predicted completion of lighting on both sides of Conduit road. Although arc lights have been erected so far only on the north side of the thoroughfare, tie rods providing circuits to the other side of the boulevard are in place.

Mathias Johnson, chairman of the association's public utilities committee, reported assignment of two additional street cars to the Potomac avenue line. The association has long sought a speed-up to have streetcars rune quarter-hourly instead of every 20 minutes as at present.

Gas Kills D. C. Man; Tube Off Wall Jet

Nicholas Noviatch, 68, was found dead in his third-floor room at 9 K street northeast last night. A rubber tube connecting a gas hotplate to a wall jet was disconnected. Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, witheld a death certificate pending further investigation.

School Girls Submit Recipes for Food They Serve Chums

Ruth Fullmer Favors Sponge Drop Tea Cakes

Alice Greenhorn Tells How to Prepare Upsidedown Muffins With Apricots; Winning Students Receive Cookbooks

By The Post Food Editor

THE JOY of creation that comes to the painter of a beautiful picture or the composer of a lovely piece of music is no more fascinating to such artists than the creation of a delicious food as done by the five winning high school girls in this week's Post recipe contest. Inspired by the announcement that publishers were offering cookbooks for winning recipes, the girls put their best feet forward and sent recipes for food they might serve at their own parties or club gatherings for schoolmates.

Let's Have Tea

Ruth Fullmer, Anacostia High School student, although very young, makes Sponge Drop Tea Cakes as a food she thinks fine for school chums. Miss Fullmer's winning recipe has won a new "friend" to help her in her cookery. The Consolidated Book Publishers have given "The Domestic Arts Cook Book," edited by Ruth Berolzheimer, widely known authority on home economics. This book contains more than 5,000 reliable recipes and helpful suggestions. There are photographs galore and there is a chapter on cooking for two, and one on wine used as flavor in cooking, with full instructions on the selection and care of wines for serving.

Miss Fullmer

The following is Miss Fullmer's winning recipe:

Sponge Drop Tea Cakes

Beat 3 egg yolks until thick and lemon-colored (about 2 minutes). Then beat in ½ cup sugar gradually. Add 1 teaspoon cold water, ½ teaspoon vanilla or lemon flavoring, and ½ teaspoon lemon rind. Sift ½ cup flour once before measuring and beat it into the egg yolk mixture. Beat 3 egg whites until frothy, add ¼ teaspoon cream of tartar and ⅛ teaspoon salt and beat until the egg whites are stiff enough to hold a point. Gently fold this into the egg yolk mixture. Then drop by spoonfuls onto ungreased wrapping paper, placed on a baking sheet. The drops should be 1½ to 2½ inches in diameter before baking. Bake as soon as batter is dropped onto paper. When done, remove immediately from paper by running a spatula under each drop. Bake for 12 to 15 minutes at 375 degrees (moderate oven). Recipe makes 6 dozen drops.

Fluffy Muffins

Alice Greenhorn, McKinley High School student, is a winner with her recipe for Apricot Muffins made upside down. She writes that they are most delicious and she often serves them with cocoa to her friends. Hart, Brace & Co., the publishers of "Everybody's Cook Book," are rewarding Miss Greenhorn with a copy of their excellent volume. This book is a comprehensive manual of home cookery, compiled from the records of the School of Household Science and Arts, Pratt Institute, edited by Isabel Ely Lord. The manual, in addition to giving tested recipes for all types of foods, also gives suggestions for marketing, information concerning the foodstuffs, cooking equipment needed, illustrations, temperatures, timetables, charts and French terms used in cookery. The following is Miss Greenhorn's winning recipe:

Miss Greenhorn

Apricot Upside Down Muffins

To prepare the apricot mixture to use in the bottom of the baking pan, soak 1 dried cooked half apricot for several hours. Partially cook, drain and place hollow side up in a muffin pan. Cover with sugar and butter. This is the proportions to use for each muffin. To make the batter, sift 2 cups flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder and ¼ cup sugar three times. Beat 1 egg, add 1 cup milk and ¼ cup melted fat. Stir this mixture into the dry ingredients. Avoid overmixing. Drop by spoonfuls over apricots in muffin pans and butter mixture. Avoid overfilling. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees for about 20 minutes. Turn upside down when taken from the baking pans.

Skating Fare

After a skating party or for Sunday night supper Frances Vendemia, McKinley High School student, tempts her schoolmates with Chili Con Carne, Mexican Style. She serves this dish with crisp crackers. As a reward for her winning recipe in this week's Post recipe contest, Miss Vendemia receives from the Bobbs Merrill Publishing Co., "The Joy of Cooking" by Irma S. Rombauer. The explicit directions and the splendid recipes contained in this book will make cooking a joy for its winner. The book resulted from the author's private record of what her family wanted, her friends recommended, and her travels in foreign countries added. The directions are written so clearly that a child can follow them readily. Miss Vendemia will find her prize book one that will meet her every need to make palatable dishes with simple means and lift everyday cooking out of the commonplace. The recipe of Miss Vendemia is as follows:

Miss Vendemia

Chili Con Carne—Mexican Style

Saute 1 chopped onion in 2 tablespoons butter or other fat. Add 1 pound ground beef and saute until brown. Add 1 pint can tomatoes, 1 tablespoon chili powder and cook for 20 minutes. Add 1 can kidney beans, salt to taste and cook for 10 minutes longer.

Two-in-One

Betty Cheeney, McKinley High School, is a winner in the recipe contest with her recipe for Taffy Apples, which she thinks are fine to serve as refreshments for club meetings. The J. B. Lippincott Publishing Co. sent their new book, "The Vegetable Cook Book," by Cora, Rose and Bob Brown. The food-loving Browns have set down more than 400 new and exciting recipes in a compact cooking encyclopedia on the subject of vegetables. This unusual book gives information on the raising of vegetables, their history, and the canning, preserving and cooking of vegetables. Miss Cheeney may have as her specialty now her favorite delicious muffins, but she will be a convert to vegetables at times, when she has digested the content of this enlightening book on vegetables and their preparation. Her winning recipe follows:

Miss Cheeney

Taffy Apples

Wash, dry and stick skewers in the stem end of 6 red apples. Cook 2 cups sugar, ½ cup corn syrup and ¾ cup water in a deep saucepan. Stir over low heat until sugar is dissolved. Tint syrup a deep red. Cook without stirring until the temperature of 300 degrees F., is reached or until a little of the syrup cracks in cold water. Stir in ½ teaspoon oil of cinnamon or ½ teaspoon vanilla. Set pan over boiling water. Plunge apples into the syrup, twirling them as you take them out. Place on a wire rack to cool.

Further cheer is enjoyed by the cheer leader when his young hostess serves turnovers she has made and cheese and tea to him after the game. Food made by the winning recipes of school girls, as given in this week's recipe contest, will send the apprentice chefs off to a flying start both as to ability and hospitality

Modern Version

Ann Myers, of Roosevelt High School, realizes the value of canned products when she wants to make a dish to feed her hungry gang after an afternoon or evening of fun. Miss Myers concocted her winning recipe for baked beans herself and writes that she can guarantee its deliciousness. She suggests serving Boston Brown Bread and hot chocolate with it.

Miss Myers

Miss Myers wins as a prize a copy of the "Day-by-Day Cook Book," given by Harper & Brothers, publishers. Demetria Taylor and Gertrude Lynn, of the staff of McCall's Magazine, are the authors of this book. It is a practical book of instructions and one that a young cook such as Miss Myers can follow without difficulty. The book is an answer to the four problems in preparing meals every day—menu-planning, marketing, balancing menus and fitting new recipes into the diet. A complete index of dishes and ingredients makes the 1,000 recipes immediately available for reference.

The following is Miss Myers' recipe:

Old-Fashioned American Baked Beans

Mix together very well, 1 can of your favorite brand of baked beans, 2 tablespoons molasses, ½ tablespoon mustard and 1 tablespoon ketchup. Put into oven baking dish. Cover the beans with brown sugar and top with bacon slices. Bake approximately 45 minutes in a moderate oven.

Water Retention Sometimes Masks Loss Of Weight; Diet for Obesity Given

A DIET for obesity should contain 1,300 calories a day, distributed with 65 grams of protein, 60 grams of fat, 130 grams of carbohydrate, and the essential minerals and vitamins.

The diet must be kept up for some time. Weight loss on a diet goes by spurts because while there is actual loss of flesh this is masked by water retention. Three weeks to a month after going on a diet the body weight suddenly goes down, then remains stationary for another month, etc.

Cutlets de Volaille, Muscovite As Served at Russian Troika

Distinctive recipes of eating places about Washington are given weekly in this column.

Zakuska, Borsch With Pirojok and Cranberry Kissel Are Also Popular and Exotic Specialities Served In Delightful Atmosphere of Old Moscow

By Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor

BIZARRE NOTES characterize Russian cookery just as they are a part of its national dances and incomparable ballet. The hors d'oeuvre or "Zakuska" are a somewhat elaborate "overture" to a Russian meal, and hold a prominent position in the typical menu. The famous Russian caviar — even now the crowning edible product of a crownless nation—although a luxury food to most people, is not considered such a delicacy by the Russian people. Shakespeare's words "caviare to the general" seems incredible to the average Russian.

Martha Ellyn

But it is not necessary to sail the high seas to know of the unusual and exotic dishes of Russia. At the Russian Troika, under the personal direction of Helen Hamilton, Washington is fortunate in having genuine Russian food served in a charming atmosphere that speaks of old Moscow with spires and steeples and the towered and battlemented walls of the Kremlin. From the moment one arrives at the entrance of the Troika, where the large window displays vodka, zubrovka and a samovar, and the attendant, garbed in authentic Caucasian costume, greets one, the feeling of old Russian atmosphere continues. The interesting murals depicting peasant life and royalty prior to the revolution, provide the background with such scenes as the Volga boatman, a carnival, guardsmen on horses, typical family scene and the famous Troika scene, from which the place takes its name. Tradition tells that a Russian officer fell in love with his superior's wife and wanted to elope. Instead of using the usual two horses to draw the sleigh, he added the third one, and so it was given the Russian name meaning three—Troika. Nicholas Vasilieff, a noted Russian artist, painted the murals. The French Room, with its gypsy French murals, fireplace and glistening crystal chandeliers, is for private parties.

Famous Chef "Kidnaped"

The soft candle light, Russian music and waiters in gay Russian blouses all give a pleasant background for the ingenious Continental Revue of Russian stars. Mischa, the suave Russian headwaiter, charts the course of the dispensing of food for which the Troika is nationally famous. Chef Feodor Karakos was "kidnaped" by Helen Hamilton from the Maisonette Russe, St. Regis Hotel, New York City, and brought to Washington to insure the most excellent in Russian food. Chef Feodor formerly presided over the food at the famous Opera Club, Chicago. This famous chef is an artist with foods.

While his creations will be enjoyed to greater extent served in the atmosphere of the Troika, yet he very generously gave a recipe of how to make a specialty a la Russe and also showed exactly how to make it. He says that four of his specialties which are extremely popular are—Breast of Chicken a la Kieff (boned breast of chicken with butter stuffing); Cutlet de Volaille, Moscovite (boned breast of chicken stuffed with mushroom dressing) Caucasian Shashlik en Brochet (pickled leg of lamb cut in pieces and broiled on sword and served flaming); Flaming Beef, Strogonoff (julienne beef tenderloin with special sauce, served flaming.) A menu made up from his dishes might be as follows:

Russian Menu

Russian Zakuska
Borsch with Pirojok
Cutlets de Volaille Moscovite
Potatoes Anna String Beans
Mixed Green Salad
Cranberry Kissel Demi Tasse

The following are Chef Fedor's directions for making Cutlets de Volaille, which is his special way of serving breasts of chicken.

Cutlets de Volaille Moscovite

Take breasts of chicken and trim very thoroughly of all veins, the end of wing left on. Split to make pocket, stuff with mushroom stuffing made with a very thick cream sauce, mixed with Parmesan cheese, chopped mushrooms and truffles. Season to taste. When stuffed, fold over and dip in beaten egg, then in croutons and saute on both sides in butter, until golden brown. Complete the cooking by baking in the oven for about five minutes.

Your Figure, Madame!

First Lady's Voice Declared Friendliest Among U. S. Celebrities

By Ida Jean Kain

IT'S NOT SO MUCH what a woman says, it's the tone of her voice, according to Mrs. Elizabeth von Hesse, the tone technician, who coaches Mrs. Roosevelt. She believes the average woman to be unaware of the part her tone of voice plays in everyday affairs.

"A friendly tone," she says humorously, "gets a woman her own way, while a nagging or complaining tone arouses instant antagonism."

Your own experience will probably corroborate Mrs. von Hesse's theory. For example, if you say to your husband, "I'm sick and tired of staying home and I want to go to the movies tonight," something in your voice tells him you think he is a selfish brute. And his reply, as he retreats behind the evening paper, is almost certain to be, "Well, I'm sick of going out and I want to stay home."

Nagging Voice Worst

What are you really trying to do, go to the movies or upbraid your husband for not taking you out more often? It's all there in the tone of your voice. You will get further if you say, cheerfully, "Don't you think it would be nice to go to the movies tonight?" At least, the man will see your side instead of being on the defensive, and, even though he may be too tired, he will urge you to go!

"A nagging voice is the worst kind in the world, because it gets to be chronic, and saying nice words can't change it," our authority goes on. "The trouble with the average woman's voice, however, is in the pitch. Muscular tension in the throat causes the voice to be sharp and high pitched. Frequently this tension results from the habit of carrying the neck forward—like a turtle!"

By this time you will suspect that exercise heads the list of Mrs. von Hesse's tone-building program and that posture correction is given immediate attention. For a pleasanter speaking voice, you are urged to carry the chest up and forward (instead of leading with your chin), to have the shoulders down and relaxed, and to pull up with the lower abdominal muscles.

Mrs. Roosevelt Cited

To further free your voice from tension, you are instructed to pretend that you are drinking a glass of water, then try to speak with the throat open for drinking. Another exercise is to imagine that you are wearing a rubber belt. Count five inaudibly as you inhale and try to see how far out at the sides you can stretch the belt. The push should be sideward, and the chest should not be raised.

Then exhale, counting five audibly, as the band shrinks. All the exercises encourage relaxation of the throat muscles with the voice originating "downstairs" rather than up in the throat.

If you ask Mrs. von Hesse, it's the effective speaking voice that wins. By effective she means "a voice that gets the desired response." She credits Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt with having the friendliest voice among our celebrities, and Helen Hayes and Bette Davis with the most effective voices among stage and screen stars.

Army Chiefs Hear Service's War Reports

6 Generals Informed By Intelligence Arm; Map Defense Increase

The Nation's highest military commanders gathered at the War Department yesterday to hear the latest reports of the Army's intelligence service on the world situation and map plans for expanding the arms and training programs.

Secretary of War Woodring greeted the three lieutenant generals and six major generals who command American field armies and corps areas, and told them that the Nation was "embarking on the greatest program of peace-time training in the history of our Army."

Woodring added that the many questions involved in the program "demand that there be a complete understanding in the field of the policies of the War Department as well as a thorough appreciation by the War Department of the many problems arising in the field."

Six divisions are now concentrated for field exercises which will last through February, after which four of them will be grouped for unprecedented corps maneuvers. The National Guard is also in the midst of extra fall training.

After Woodring addressed his generals, the Chief of Staff, Gen. George C. Marshall, and his principal assistants spoke on the world situation and legislative plans for expanding the Army. The group probably will conclude sessions today.

Other defense developments of the day were:

Members of the House deficiency appropriation sub-committee said Navy officials informed them that the cost of remedying defects in a new class of destroyers would be between $600,000 and $1,000,000.

There was some discussion in Congressional circles for a general investigation into defense expenditures, as well as a probe of ship defects. Senator Tydings, of Maryland, ranking Democratic member of the Senate Naval Committee, opposed a general inquiry, as probably involving partisan politics, while Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, urged creation of a joint Senate-House investigating committee.

Army Will Name 5 New Air Bases After Hero Pilots

Five of the Army's new air bases will be named for Air Corps pilots who lost their lives in service in the past three years, Secretary of War Woodring announced yesterday.

The major northeast base at Holyoke, Mass., it was said, will be designated Westover Field in honor of Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover, Air Corps chief, who was killed in an air crash September 21, 1938.

The new base at Tampa, Fla., will be known as MacDill Field, in memory of Col. Leslie MacDill, prominent World War flier, who crashed while taking off from Bolling Field here, last year.

A new base in Panama, at Bruja Point, will be named for Maj. Charles H. Howard, and the Sacramento air deport will be named after Maj. Hez McClellan. Both Howard and McClellan were war pilots and both were killed in plane crashes three years ago.

The Ogden air depot, Utah, will be designated Hill Field, for Capt. Ployer P. Hill, also a war flier, who was killed in 1935. The new Puerto Rican base will be known at Borinquen Field, after the original name of the island.

Donations Pour Into Home Of Capital Man in Iron Lung

Most Contributors Anonymous, So Wife Thanks Them Through Post; Check Arrives at Hospital, Brings Patient to Tears

Sympathetic Washingtonians, most of them anonymous, continued to come to the aid yesterday to Mrs. Tacie Cooke to prevent her home from being broken up by the illness of her husband, who today enters his third week in an "iron lung" at Gallinger Hospital.

Cooke, 28-year-old bus driver for the Capital Transit Co., is suffering from infantile paralysis. The couple have two children, Betty Ann, 5, and Willa Mae Florence, 2.

Yesterday the postman delivered to the Cooke home, 1729 Bay street southeast, two anonymous letters each containing a $5 bill; a check for $8 from a Social Security Board official and an unsigned letter containing $1.

Cooke Weeps in Hospital

Sent directly to the hospital was a $5 money order which affected Cooke so deeply that he wept, resulting in an order against his being informed of any more assistance. Emotional stress, it is feared, might aggravate his condition.

Three former neighbors of the family announced plans for a benefit party to be held December 11 at Holbrook Farms Dairy, Cottage City, Md. The benefit will be sponsored by Mrs. Almon S. Nelson, 1415 Trinidad avenue northeast; Mrs. Herbert E. Goodrich, 1417 Trinidad avenue, and Mrs. Stephen B. Jones, 1418 Orren street northeast.

Mrs. Nelson said the dairy would furnish the hall without cost, and the Cottage City Volunteer Fire Department and various merchants have promised to donate equipment and refreshments.

Mrs. Cooke Gives Thanks

Other persons are raising funds to pay the rent on the Cooke home, which falls due December 13, and to meet other household expenses during the husband's siege of illness.

Mrs. Cooke was uneasy yesterday because she has no way of thanking the anonymous Samaritans, other than through The Post.

"Please write that all of us—William, the children and myself—are deeply grateful," she said.

Hearths—Functional, Decorative

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

If winter isn't actually in the air yet, it's in prospect, and so in our hearts we are blessing ideas of a hospitable hearth against the closing in of the dreary months. For the fireplace is still the symbolic center of family life, even though fancy furnaces and tricky thermostats have taken over its more utilitarian duties. As the functional value of the fireplace decreases, its decorative importance increases. And so we continue here today suggestions for design and arrangements of mantels.

For the informal room, a simple brick hearth with a Dutch oven has placid charm. The one-sided design suggests an interesting, asymetrical arrangement of big coper trays and candlesticks on the mantel shelf.

There's nothing in the world wrong with the old popular custom of putting a clock on the mantel shelf. Providing it's a clock worthy of the place. A banjo clock maybe, or an interesting modern glass clock, an old Delft china clock or a really good-looking wood cabinet clock. Ensemble the clock with something more unusual than a couple of candlesticks . . . a row of fine old plates, perhaps, some carved ivory or wood figurines, strings of bright gourds, or for that matter, a collection of old clocks and watches.

Helen Gahagan Charms D. C. Society At Luncheon Given by Miss Fleming

Wife of Actor Melvyn Douglas Honored By Former Barnard College Classmate; Mrs. Douglas Among the Ranking Guests

By Hope Ridings Miller

SO FAR AS forty-odd Washington women were concerned, Helen Gahagan (Mrs. Melvyn Douglas), of stage and screen fame, ran away with the social spotlight yesterday when she was feted at a large luncheon given by Miss Minnie Mae Fleming.

In town with her actor husband for a brief stay, Miss Gahagan is in for a continual round of parties that got under way yesterday at 1 o'clock when a flock of women found their way to the room where Miss Fleming was receiving. The hostess, who has known her guest of honor for years and was one of her Barnard College classmates, had selected her guests from a cross section of the Capital's official, diplomatic and residential circles. The result was one of the gayest luncheons of the season—and one that may make history in more ways than one.

Miss Gahagan, who achieves the seemingly impossible in that she combines Hollywood glamour with the quality of being as natural as your next door neighbor, was smartly attired in a black frock, cut on simple lines. Her twisted turban featured shades of green, gray and wine velvet to match her wisp of a veil that blended with the orchid corsage on her shoulder.

Miss Fleming had on a softly draped accordion plaited dress, set off with a high crowned matching hat, which was tilted at a rakish angle over her auburn hair.

The table at which guests were seated carried ou an autumnal motif. A pumpkin draped with bunches of grapes was the centerpiece and four long baskets of gold and rust chrysanthemums further enhanced the decorative effect.

RANKING GUESTS were Mrs. William O. Douglas, wife of the Supreme Court Justice, who was trimly turned out in a black ensemble; Mme. Alfred Bilmanis, wife of the Latvian Minister; Senora de Caceres, wife of the Minister of Honduras, and Mrs. Sheridan Downey, wife of the Senator from California.

Mme. Emmanuel Lombard, in a snappy black outfit, was there; also, Senora de Munilla, Mrs. Henry F. Grady, whose mulberry crepe frock was worn with a pretty plumed hat of a deep wine shade; Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson, Mme. Karel Brejska, Mrs. Walter Wyatt and Mrs. Raymond Clapper.

STILL OTHERS there were Mrs. Ernest H. Van Fossan, Mrs. Basil Manly, Mrs. Frank A. Waring, Mrs. Aubrey William, Miss Ruth Jones, Mrs. May Thompson Evans, Mrs. Henry L. Deimel, jr., Mrs. Fletcher Warren, Mrs. Charles A. Thomson, Mrs. Harry Pierson and Mrs. Carroll Stewart, who entertained later yesterday at a tea at the Shoreham in honor of her house guest, Mrs. Mary Shannon Harrington, of Los Angeles.

Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister arrived at the luncheon late, having been detained because of a radio "forum" in which she and Miss Marion Martin had just participated. Mrs. Howard S. LeRoy was in the company, which also included Mrs. Irene Caldwell, Mrs. J. Frederick Essary, Mrs. Bulkley Griffin, Mrs. Robert Carr, Mrs. Russell Shetterly, Mrs. L. W. Miller, Mrs. W. Fenlon Nicholson and Mrs. J. Clinton Tribby.

MRS. BRUCE SMITH, who could not stay for luncheon as she had arranged a family Thanksgiving party at the Mayflower, stopped in briefly at the Fleming fete for a glass of sherry and a short chat with Miss Gahagan. Others in company were Mrs. Francis Cabell Brown, Miss Mary Johnson, Miss Helen Jean Nolan, and a group of former Barnard College students, including Mrs. C. E. Brown, Mrs. Frank S. Phillips, Mrs. James Carroll and Mrs. David Barr.

Miss Gahagan and Mr. Douglas will be on hand this afternoon for a very small tea to be given by Mrs. Henry F. Grady in her apartment at the Highlands. Tonight, Miss Fleming will fete the visitors at a small dinner at the Shoreham. Miss Gahagan will be honored tomorrow at a luncheon at which Mrs. Barnet Nover will be hostess; and Representative and Mrs. Jerry Voorhis will fete both Mr. and Mrs. Douglas at dinner tomorrow night. Justice and Mrs. Thomas Francis McAllister have cards out for a tea Sunday afternoon in honor of the Douglases; and on Sunday night, they will be honored at a dinner to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wyatt.

THE LUNCHEON for Miss Gahagan was not the only one enlivening the second Thanksgiving Day of the season. Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg entertained fourteen friends in honor of her house guest, Mrs. Richmond Temple, of London, who has been in New York for several weeks and came on to Washington Wednesday for a brief stay. Formerly a resident of Michigan, Mrs. Temple has known Mrs. Vandenberg for years. Mrs. Temple's husband is an old friend of the Minister of Finland, Hjalmar Procope, who entertained her informally at dinner Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Temple will return to New York today or tomorrow. Senator and Mrs. Vandenberg, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Sims, will attend the Army-Navy game tomorrow in Philadelphia.

Berenice Merchant Makes Debut At Reception at Sulgrave Club

Younger Set Dances; Dinner Follows Party

IN A CLOUD of white net over silver, Miss Berenice Wyeth Merchant made her curtsey to Washington society yesterday afternoon at a reception given by her parents, Col. and Mrs. Berkeley T. Merchant, at the Sulgrave Club.

Between 4:30 and 7 o'clock, shoals of people arrived to greet the newest addition to the debutante ranks, to chat, sip tea, and dance to the ever-lilting strains of Sydney's music.

Standing with her parents, the debutante received in a frock of white net fashioned over silver cloth with a sweetheart neckline, edged in ruching and puffed sleeves. Her bouffant skirt was banded in silver and gathered into a silver corselet at the waist. A shower of pink rosebuds completed the pretty, blonde debutante's costume.

Younger Set Enjoys Dancing

Mrs. Merchant had selected a frock of blue with silver threads worked into a pretty pattern on the cloth and trimmed in rhinestones. Her corsage was of orchids.

The debutante and her parents greeted guests at the head of the stairway, before a background of blossoms, that were gifts to Miss Merchant.

The younger set gathered in the ballroom where there was dancing. The card room was also crowded, as drinks were dispensed there. There was another punch bowl in the flower-decked oval room of the club.

Yellow chrysanthemums and lighted tapers centered the tea table in the dining room. Among those at the table throughout the afternoon were Mme. Lombard, wife of the Military Attache of the French Embassy; Mrs. William M. Guthrie, Mrs. Ralph R. Richardson, of Chicago and Berryville, Va.; Mrs. James Alexander Lyon, Mrs. Charles Oman, Mrs. Patrick Hurley, Mrs. Guy V. Henry and Mrs. Maxwell Murray.

Dispensing punch at the various bowls were Mrs. Frederick W. Manly, Mrs. W. M. Grimes, Mrs. Garlington Chamberlin, Mrs. Alexander M. Milton, and Mrs. Frederick Boyer.

Dinner Follows Debut Tea

In their pretty tea frocks the debutantes assisting made an attractive picture as they whirled about the dance floor or chatted gayly. They were Miss May Byrne Simpson, Miss Marilynn Himes, Miss Edith Pearson, Miss Molly Stonestreet, Miss Elizabeth Hall, Miss Nancy Strong, Miss Coby Ranneft, Miss Achsah Bowie Dorsey, Miss Patricia Prochnik and Miss Patricia Hurley.

After the debut, Miss Merchant was hostess at dinner at the Chevy Chase Club, having as her guests the young ladies assisting and their beaux. Included among the young men were Frederick Parks, Jack Arrington, Sidney Kent, John Macy, Bowdoin Craighill, Jules Titus, Joseph Fisher, James Shields, Canfield Himes, Peter Duke, Charles Nicholson, Sam Stonestreet, Robert Wilson and Harry Primrose, of Baltimore.

Electrical Expert, Discovered Behind the Scenes At Party, Deplores Decline of Elaborate Affairs

BEHIND THE SCENES at Patricia Hurley's dance the other night we discovered a man who has as much to do as anyone with making elaborate Washington parties a success. He is Leslie C. Brown, who has been in charge of lighting at dances and elaborate dinners here for a quarter of a century.

At every gala fete where there are special illumination effects, an electrician is lurking watchfully somewhere in the background in case there should be a short circuit or similar catastrophe. The man assigned to Patricia Hurley's debut remained on duty until the last guest departed at 4 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Brown deplores the current economical trend in Washington society and longs for the olds days when even dinners were given to the accompaniment of superlighting effects. He remembers one predepression supper where the entire ceiling was covered with wires to hold autumn leaves and tiny colored electric bulbs.

BESIDES BEING a lighting specialist, Mr. Brown is an authority on the various chandeliers in some of the more stately buildings of the Capital. In his opinion the handsomest in the entire city are the beautiful crystals in the East Room of the White House. Bought by the Government in 1909, during the Taft Administration, they are worth about $10,000.

One of Mr. Brown's most difficult jobs was taking down and cleaning the chandeliers in the British Embassy when the walls and ceilings had to be reinforced last year. Each of the hundreds of crystals had to be removed piece by piece, while the chandeliers were still attached to the ceiling, lest they be broken if taken down all at once.

VERY FEW people are in the market for chandeliers these days, which is perhaps lucky, as most of the crystals are made in Czecho-Slovakia and thus have been getting scarcer and scarcer. Mr. Brown believes that Myron Hofer has one of the loveliest in private residences—his is made of genuine Waterford crystal, which has a slight bluish tinge. Waterford crystals were made in Ireland for many years, but their manufacture was discontinued for a long time until recently.

BRENDA FRAZIER (and believe it or not we discovered a man yesterday who had never heard of her) glamourized attaches at the Washington Airport last night when her Eastern Airlines' plane stopped here for 15 minutes en route to Miami . . . Mrs. George T. Summerlin, jr., will entertain at luncheon tomorrow in honor of Miss Ellen Floweree.

CARMEL WHITE, who played the part of the disillusioned Connecticut wife in the Broadway production of "Kiss the Boys Good-Bye," and is now touring with the show, was a credit to her aunt, Fashion Editor Carmel Snow, at luncheon yesterday. She wore a purple tweed suit, with matching hat, and an enormous ring of a square cut stone of matching color.

Miss White looks in the middle thirties in her part, but has just passed her twenty-second birthday. She and the rest of the cast have spent every day here sightseeing, trooping en masse through the Corcoran Art Gallery and other points of interest. After about 500 performances of "Kiss the Boys" she is still wearing the identical evening gown she wore for her part on the opening night—a lovely empire model of striped satin.

Mrs. Farrington To Skip Party

For the first time in 15 years, Mrs. Frederic Ernest Farrington, regent of the Chevy Chase Junior College, will not hold her famous Christmas Eve house party, although she expects to resume it next year.

The reason—Mrs. Farrington, accompanied by her sister-in-law, Mrs. Myron T. Scudder, and Mrs. Marie Manning Gasch, will spend the Yule holidays in Mexico City and the Mayan country. They will leave Washington on December 21, will sail from New York the following day, land at Vera Cruz and arrive in Mexico City on December 28. They will return to Washington on January 16.

Yesterday Mrs. Farrington entertained at a Thanksgiving tea for students of the school and their Washington friends and parents. Approximately 250 guests attended.

Assisting Mrs. Farrington were the following Chevy Chase students: Miss Hope Graves, Miss Gay Chambers, Miss Betty Jean Cushman, Miss Jean Sexton, Miss Alice Balzac, Miss Betty Campbell, Miss Louise Little, Miss Alice Jean Whitt, and Miss Audrey Thompson.

Also Miss Carlotta Fowler, Miss Virginia Reynolds, Miss Shirley Cowan, Miss Lianne Hopkins, Miss Virginia Gregory, Miss Ellen Chaney, Miss Virginia Alling, Miss Shirley Tholen, Miss Genevieve Stanley, Miss Martha Hanna, Miss Mary Clifton LaForce, and Miss Betty Lloyd.

The Marshalls Hold 'At Home'

The Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. George C. Marshall, and Mrs. Marshall, were at home yesterday afternoon from 5 to 6 in their quarters at Fort Myer for Army and Corps Area commanders who met here yesterday morning for a general conference.

Mrs. Marshall received with Mrs. Harold R. Stark, wife of Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations. Pouring tea were Mrs. Harry Woodring, wife of the Secretary of War; Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Malin Craig, wife of the former Chief of Staff, and Mrs. Edwin M. Watson.

The visiting officers present were Lieut. Gens. Hugh A. Drum, Stanley H. Ford and Stanley D. Embick, and Maj. Gens. John L. DeWitt, Herbert J. Brees, James K. Parsons, Percy Bishop, James A. Woodruff and Daniel Van Voorhis. Invitations were also extended to chiefs of arms, branches and services, their assistant chiefs, and senior officers of the General Staff.

Among the ranking guests were, of course, Mrs. Woodring and the Acting Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison.

Others noted there were the Chief of Engineers, Maj. Gen. Julian L. Schley, and Mrs. Schley; the Chief of Field Artillery, Maj. Gen. Robert M. Danford, and Mrs. Danford; the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, Maj. Gen. Albert H. Blanding, and Mrs. Blanding.

The Closes Hosts To Lord Lothian

Lord Lothian, British Ambassador, was the guest of honor at an informal "black tie" dinner given last night by the South African Minister and Mrs. Ralph William Close.

The company included Justice and Mrs. Felix Frankfurter.

Ada Gibson's Betrothal Told

Dr. and Mrs. John Aldridge Gibson, of Leesburg, Va., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Ada Perry Gibson, to Dr. Walter E. Daniel, of Charlotte, N. C. Dr. Daniel is the son of Mrs. W. E. Daniel, of Weldon, N. C., and the late Mr. Daniel.

The wedding will take place in Leesburg in December.

Mexican Envoy To Honor Doctors

The Mexican Ambassador, Dr. Don Francisco Castillo Najera, will be ranking guest at a luncheon today at the Mayflower in compliment to three South American members of the medical profession, who are visiting here after attendance at the Latin-American Surgical Congress in Mexico City.

Guests will be Dr. Teodoro Maldonado, president of the National University of Ecuador; Dr. Carlos Polit, professor of medicine, School of Medicine, Quito, and Dr. O. Zunzunegui, surgeon, Valparaiso, Chile.

Other members of the diplomatic corps present will be the Ambassador of Ecuador, Senor Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro; the Ambassador of Panama, Senor Dr. Miguel Lopez Pumarejo; the Ambassador of Panama, Senor Dr. Don Augusto S. Boyd, and the Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Alberto Cabero.

The International Medical Club of Washington will be host to the company. Dr. Lee McCarthy is president of the group and Dr. P. S. Constantinople the secretary. Approximately 75 persons will be present.

Eleanor Campbell Will Wed Dec. 27

Invitations have been issued by the Commercial Counselor of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell for the marriage of their daughter, Eleanor Maria, to Enrique Gacitua on December 27.

The marriage will take place at the Chilean Embassy at 5:30 o'clock. Mr. Gacitua is Chilean consul in New Jersey.

Today's Social Notes

(From the Truthtown Torch.)

Mr and Mrs. Ethelbert Vanderpuffer held their annual Thanksgiving dinner last night at their town house for members of their family and a few of their close friends. The menu included stuffed orange cup, stuffed lobster, stuffed celery, stuffed olives, roast turkey stuffed with chestnut dressing, a la Puritane; stuffed eggplant, stuffed peppers, stuffed squash, stuffed tomato salad, stuffed baked apples, and stuffed dates.

Refugee Party

Mrs. Bartholomew Mink had a few of her friends in to tea yesterday to meet several European refugees to whom she has opened her home for the duration of the war. Among Mrs. Mink's guests are Ming-a-ling III, a white Pekingese from the celebrated Waggbourne Kennels, of London; Ch. Roscoe of Wintergate, a pedigreed Labrador retriever; two French poodles, Ninette and Celeste, and Lady Mimi, a tailless Manx from the Isle of Man.

The party nearly ended in a rout when Mrs. Otis Tinfoil arrived with her refugee dachshund, Ch. Otto II of Flutzemburg. Mrs. Tinfoil was forced to send Otto home with her chauffeur.

Political Note

Mrs. Hortense Beetle Luker has been named chairman of the women's division of the Blurb for President movement. Mrs. Luker is the wife of the late Caleb Luker, noodle magnate, who left an estate of $20,000,000. Mrs. John Hack, who has long been active in women's clubs and political societies, will serve as assistant executive chairman of the Blurb organization.

How to Win Friends

Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Keener slipped quietly out of town yesterday to recuperate from the effects of the social furore that was raised by the appointment of Mr. Keener as head of the newly created Multiform Bureau of the Government. Parties have been given during the last two weeks for Mr. and Mrs. Keener by the Roswell Clymers, the Mortimer Mushrooms, the Mark Stepplts, the Reginald Leeches, the Percy Crashes, the Chauncey Newcomes and scores of other friends and acquaintances.

Mr. Keener's appointment brought felicitations and invitations from such a large number of persons that he was forced to discontinue his telephone. Mrs. Keener found it necessary to employ two social secretaries to open telegrams and letters. In his new position, Mr. Keener is understood to be directly in line for an even greater honor in the Government.

DECEMBER MORN—Miss Peggy Mae Paddle, noted swimming champion, poses a moment beside this symbol of winter, a sturdy oak tree almost denuded of leaves.

OLD WASHINGTON—Two pretty members of the Dizzy Dames Revue, Miss Maybelle Smirk and Miss Mitzi Wiggle, are shown here on either side of the famous doorway of the old Stalactite home which is to be torn down in the march of the city's progress.

SNOW SCENE—Here is Miss Nadine Warble, lovely night club hostess, surveying of the beauty of Potomac Park as painted by the icy hand of winter.

Room-Size Carpets Best for Winter Easier to Clean

Room-size floor coverings are warmer and more healthful through the drafty cold months. In any home where there are children, especially, it is good to have wall-to-wall carpets.

Such carpeting costs by no means as much as it used to. Many homemakers like it also because it makes a room look larger.

If the right color is selected, wall-to-wall carpet helps to coordinate the elements of a room in which the furniture is an accumulation rather than a decorator's dream.

Another practical advantage is that full-size floor covering presents no cleaning difficulties, since it is easy to use the vacuum cleaner methodically on it.

If for any reason room-size carpet is not desired, then the next most useful floor covering is a rug as nearly as possible the size of the room. One of its avantages is its adaptability for use in other rooms.

Two Versions of the Bouffant Gown

Proving that both tall and short fashion models can wear the ever popular robe de style, here are two girls dressed in versions of this holiday waltz frock. At left is Teddy Overman, trained in grace by Thelma Doyle for the "fashion of the week" at the Shoreham Hotel. Teddy's statuesque slenderness is enhanced by her billowy gown of net and silver lame draped across the bosom to give an uplifted line of beauty. At right, tripping down the runway of a Hotel 2400 fashion show promenade, is diminutive Patsy Bride, in a cameo-like frock of satin brocade, sculptured and shirred about the bodice

Flat Chested Figure Doomed, Declares Designer of 'Uplifts'

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

EVEN IF women do return to the flat heels, pot-shaped cloches and mannish suits of the post World War period, there is no possibility that they will become flat-chested again. In fact there will never be a revival of the curveless boyish form of the 1920's, according to Edith Lances, creator of the sculptural bra, who for the last fifteen years has custom-molded many an aristocratic bustline nearer to the client's heart and her dressmaker's desires.

Marshall Adams

The rather shy, but incredibly swift-working Miss Lances, who has been at a Washington store for the last two days offering advice, gives Mae West and the last World War the credit for uplifting the bustline habits of the nation. She claims that the immediate years following the World War were such sartorial things of horror that women revolted against string bean figures and sexless-looking bustlines. Physicians rebelled, too, at the straining of ligaments, softening of tissues and brutalizing of natural curves.

Mae West Credited

As an aftermath to the self-consciousness of that flat-chested era, Miss Lances recalls a wholesale trend toward natural curves during the 1930's. It reached a peak when Mae West first undulated across the silver screen in "She Done Him Wrong." "Mae West was the real life saver of the high-busted natural line of beauty," chuckled Miss Lances, who added that the French dress designers immediately came to Miss West's defense with revivals of their favorite silhouette, the hour glass figure, still an important silhouette this season.

Despite Fashion Designer Elizabeth Hawes' emphatic prediction at the Women's National Press Club that "within ten years women will have discarded corsets and bras," Miss Lances feels that bras will be taken even more seriously in the future. More and more she says, bras are being custom-designed at ready-to-wear prices and tailored to suit individuals.

No-Cut Straps

Miss Lances says the majority of women have fallen or flabby breasts, due to improper girdling when maturing, to glandular weakness or a lack of muscular control. Their fallen contours should be uplifted, she points out. But they should not be pulled up from above, but from below where the strain is greatest.

Also the size of the bustline must never be underestimated. The back and torso proportions are often unwisely neglected, observes Miss Lances, who has found that the extra full bust may require a narrow back line. Another mistaken conception is that shoulder straps can pull up the whole bustline. They actually only result in shoulder bruises and broken tissues.

Make Toy Chests For Christmas

HOW THOSE youngsters of yours will shout for joy when they see a gay Mexican toy chest. They'll love the stubborn burro, the funny little Mexican in blanket and sombrero, the spiny cacti.

And you can make this toy chest quickly and inexpensively from one of the stout wooden boxes your groceries come in. Best to choose one about 28 inches long, 12 inches wide and 15 inches high.

Fasten a lid in place with hinges and attach brass chains on the inside. Screw rotary casters under the box corners.

Now for the Mexican "scene." First sandpaper the wood, then paint the top half of the outside a light blue for the sky, the lower half in sand color for the desert. Borders, lid and inside you paint medium blue.

The figures and landscape you cut from papers of different colors. For instance, the hills are purple, the burro gray. The man has a red blanket, a yellow and black hat.

Glue decorations in place and when dry apply one or two coats of shellac to the entire box. And what a thrilling gift you've made!

There's still time before Christmas to make a Colonial doll house for your little daughter, unusual and delightful gifts for friends—yes, original Christmas cards, too.

Complete diagrammed instructions for these and other gifts—as well as directions and patterns for the toy chest—are given in our 40-page booklet, "How to Make a Doll House and Other Hand-made Gifts." Includes doll bassinet, sewing table, bathroom utility box, bracelet and belt set, man's traveling case, many more.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "How to Make a Doll House and Other Hand-Made Gifts" to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Girl's Acid Attack Upon Midshipmen's Manners Draws Mass Reply From Naval Academy Students

HAVING ENTERTAINED A PAIR of midshipmen in her parents' home on two successive week-ends, a girl who has "never been to Annapolis in (her) life" wrote this column several days ago to express her "perfect contempt for midshipmen (who), seem to be a conceited bunch of spongers with no sense of social obligation." As an instance of the midshipmen's bad manners, she said that while her house guests had written to thank her and her sister for their hospitality, "they didn't have the decency to send their regards to Mother and Dad, or attempt in any way to return what we had done for them." Now this desk is flooded with letters of comment on the subject, some of which are presented in today's column. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a midshipman and (I hope) a gentleman. The young lady in Washington whose acquaintanceship with two midshipmen caused her to brand all midshipmen as "conceited spongers," is, in my opinion, somewhat narrowminded. I agree with you that her resentful charge seems inspired by the fact that neither of these boys asked her over to Annapolis for a week-end.

As for their failure to "send regards" to her parents, I would wager that 50 per cent of all young men of college age would have failed even to send the girls "thank you" notes after a week-end visit, much less indite additional messages to the parents. I would also wager that the two midshipmen concerned deported themselves as perfect gentlemen, since the girl says that they "seemed to have a fine time."

Some of us midshipmen think that "Disgusted" should delve a little more deeply into the financially and socially restricted life led by the boys and should also meet more than just two of them, before allowing herself to form a sweeping opinion about them.

AVERAGE MIDSHIPMAN.

'Disgusted's' Complaint Called Self-Damning

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: You are absolutely right in thinking that we midshipmen would not be willing to ignore that scathing indictment of "Disgusted." Perhaps the two midshipmen she complained about were ungentlemanly in their actions, but it is more likely they were merely thoughtless

However, it seems obvious that "Disgusted" is a spoiled brat who expected to be invited to the functions at the Naval Academy in return for dishing out her parents' hospitality to the midshipmen. But whose fault is it if she was found lacking in the qualities which make a suitable "drag?"

The money given midshipmen for pleasures ranges from $2 to $11 a month. Since one week-end's "dragging" would require approximately a month's salary, midshipmen aren't going to invite a girl to the Academy simply to pay off an incidental social obligation. So we would advise "Disgusted" not to publicize her disappointment and thereby reveal her minus personality. In any event, she shouldn't presume to judge 2,400 midshipmen by the actions of two.

MIDSHIPMAN C. I. S.

The Officer's Uniform Always Fawned on

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have just read the tirade of "Disgusted" anent middies. I agree that many of them are conceited, but I dislike to hear them called "spongers." Middies are average boys from every type of home, and many of limited financial means. Hitherto unnoticed, as soon as they are clad in the trappings of the Naval Academy they become socially desirable to fawning, flattering, uniform-loving young ladies and their mamas, all willing to entertain them for the privilege of being seen in their company.

If the boys are sufficiently trusting to attribute all this attention to their personal charm, rather than recognize it as tribute to their uniforms, well—that is only human. I recall many invitations which I received from virtual strangers when I was wearing an officer's uniform. And I recall, also, the abruptness with which they "dropped" me when I returned to mufti.

Why not ascribe good motives to the boys? Why not assume that they preferred not to accept further hospitality from the parents when they were not interested in the daughters? "Disgusted" seems to have figured that these middies were hers by right of purchase.

AMUSED.

Much-Discussed Subject At Breakfast Table

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The letter from "Disgusted" about those two "awful" midshipmen was probably the most discussed subject among all of us "awful" midshipmen at breakfast Tuesday morning. It is true that we enjoy a nice week-end visit occasionally, but we seldom write love letters to the parents of "dates," even though the parents in many cases are wonderful people.

It is too, too terrible that we can't invite every girl to the social events at the Naval Academy; but that's the way it is. We think that "Disgusted" will probably save herself a lot of grief if she will just get her mind off the affairs of us "disgusting" midshipmen. Disgustedly yours,

N. M. W.

Thinks Even a 'Brick' Deserves a Break

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The letter from "Disgusted" and your reply has caused quite a bit of comment here at the Naval Academy. There was a long discussion at Tuesday morning's breakfast table and it seems to be the consensus among midshipmen that the girl was angry because she hadn't been invited here for a week-end visit. However, there is one point of complaint where the girl is justified, I think. Since these two midshipmen spent two week-ends at the home of the girls' parents, the least they could have done was to invite her to Annapolis for a week-end hop, even if she is a "brick."

A Woman's New York

Social Register Is Notable for Those Missing

New York, Nov. 30.

THAT HARDY PERENNIAL, the New York version of the Social Register, is now in the hands of its subscribers, and it is always good for a hearty chuckle or two as a bookworm looks for names missing from its pages—now numbering about a thousand. I sometimes wonder just who isn't in society, so plump has the tomb become.

Actresses pop in and out of it with remarkable agility. Does a young lady of the noblesse come down with an attack of stage fever and actually get a job in a play, out comes her name quicker than a rabbit from a plug hat. But if she repents her sinful ways and enters matrimony with a gentleman of standing, her name returns just as quickly, as is the case with big beautiful Whitney Bourne, who is now in retirement as the spouse of Mr. Stanton Griffis.

It is also interesting to note that the pretty little society girls who sing in night clubs are still listed. Perhaps that is because they are not really professional.

Best of all, I like the way the rich rug family, the Sanfords, cut the book dead. When Laddie, the polo-playing son, was expurgated after his marriage to the beautiful actress, Mary Duncan, the whole clan rallied and asked not to be listed at all the next year. That's the way to treat this pretentious compendium. Take no back-chat?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—It was indeed a frabjous day when Monsieur Charles Boyer, until recently of the French artillery, landed from the Clipper plane with his pretty missus, Pat Paterson. Chuck denied he was back again to propogandize the ladies of America, though he admitted he was much flattered by the rumor. And what did Pat say to the idea? "Why, I wouldn't let him!" she answered.

Getting very stylish for the pretty daughters of newspapermen, especially sports writers, to go on the stage or screen. Frances Mercer, daughter of Sid of a local paper, is in the cast of "Very Warm for May," and Florence Rice, daughter of the veteran Grantland, has adorned Hollywood movies for some time. And then there's Anita Colby, one of our loveliest models, whose father is "Bud" Counihan, cartoonist.

Sorry to hear that San Francisco couldn't raise the wind to reopen its Golden Gate Exposition next year. Mighty beautiful show, that.

REHOUSING, my favorite of all projects, goes on apace here. Now they're planning to raze the awful slums that surround the Brooklyn Navy Yard and fill the area with new apartment buildings. Much has been accomplished here—but so much remains to be done. Ever wander over lower East Side on a hot August night? Not a very gay experience.

A red hot pick for the finest young actress in Hollywood blew in the other day, in the pretty person of Jane Bryan, who came to glory first in "The Old Maid," and now in "We Are Not Alone," which stars Mr. Paul Muni. But Jane comes as near as a toucher to stealing it from the Great Man. She's here with her mother, Mrs. William O'Brien, to see the sights and attend the premiere of the Muni-Bryan picture. What a wide, pretty smile the child has, too.

Plans for it will be completed tomorrow at a meeting of the Junior State Board at the home of the junior State president, Robert de Shazo, jr., at 2:30. There will also be a report on the by-laws by William Pennington and his committee.

Ickes Charges Judge Shielded Fellow Jurist

Secretary Attacks Court for Ending Contraband Oil Trial

Interior Secretary Ickes yesterday launched an angry attack on a Federal district judge whose action in ending a hot-oil trial without allowing the Government to complete its case "seriously handicaps the administration of an act of Congress."

Ickes accused Federal Judge James C. Wilson, of the Houston (Tex.) District Court, of allowing two defendants to withdraw pleas of not guilty and substitute pleas of nolo contendere on certain misdemeanor counts, and of dismissing other misdemeanor counts and one felony charge. This he did, Ickes continued, after he had "indicated that he desired to avoid the introduction of evidence and circumstances which might reflect . . . upon a certain named Federal district judge."

Defendants in the case, which came to trial November 20, were Neal Powers and Rene Allred, brother of the former Governor of Texas, James V. Allred, who is now a United States district judge.

Conspiracy Charged

In his statement, issued "because the public is entitled to know in what fashion this particular law is being enforced," Ickes said the defendants were indicted for alleged violations of the Connally hot-oil act and for an alleged conspiracy to violate the act.

He said Wilson allowed the plans to be changed despite the opposition of the Justice Department, handling the prosecution for the Interior Department, which administers the Connally act.

Ickes said the Justice Department informed him that Wilson called Special Assistant to the Attorney General Ben F. Foster into his chambers and said he saw no reason to continue the trial since he would impose just as heavy sentences on the nolo pleas as he would if there were a conviction on all counts.

$1,000 Total Fine

"Foster informed the judge that he had no authority to dismiss any counts of the indictment and he resisted the suggestions of the judge," the statement continued.

The court allowed the change of the pleas on November 27, Ickes said, "without prior notice to the Government."

"The Government consistently made clear its refusal to agree to such a disposition of the case, but the court, nevertheless, imposed an insignificant total fine of $1,000 on all three counts as to each defendant. Fines of such modest proportions in comparison with stakes in extensive running of contraband oil hardly can be regarded as an adequate deterrent," Ickes concluded.

Arlingtonians Hit Va. Tax on U. S. Workers

Proposed Income Levy Held Unjust By Civic Leader

The move of State Tax Commissioner C. H. Morrissett at Richmond to prepare a bill to permit the levying of an income tax by Virginia on Federal employes in the State, drew quick protests from leaders in civic affairs in Arlington County last night.

Julian D. Simpson, member of the executive committee and secretary of the Arlington County Civic Federation, said: "Since approximately 6,500 residents of the county are on the Federal pay roll, naturally any laws that will affect their well-being is of vital importance to the county, and I believe the civic federation will give the matter careful consideration and discussion at its meeting next Tuesday night."

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Magruder, member of the Arlington County board and former chairman, said:

"Arlington County would be badly hit, because we have so many Federal employes living here. And such a tax would be unjust to them."

Mrs. Ruby G. Simpson, president of the Organized Women Voters of Arlington County, said:

"More than 50 per cent of our membership will be personally affected and I feel it will work a great hardship on our citizens."

Capone Fancies Self a Modern Robin Hood

Special Dispatch to The Post

Miami, Fla., Nov. 30.—Al Capone has become "socially conscious."

The famous gangster of prohibition days, now under treatment in Baltimore, for paresis, hopes to establish factories throughout the country paying a minimum wage of $75 a week, it was learned today from friends of the Capone family, interviewed here where the "big fellow" has an estate.

The plan is said to fit into the Chicago racketeer's paresis-induced "delusions of grandeur" in which he views himself as a latter-day Robin Hood, who robbed from the rich in order to give the proceeds to the poor.

Bund Opens Drive to Pay for Kuhn's Appeal

Still 'Our Leader,' Fuehrer No. 2 Tells New York Members

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—Fritz Kuhn's "successor-elect" declared tonight that the jailed "fuehrer" still heads the German-American Bund and initiated a drive for funds to finance an appeal from Kuhn's conviction yesterday of forgery and thefts from the bund treasury.

Addressing some 400 members of the bund at a meeting in the Bronx while a closed bund meeting was held in nearby Astoria, Queens, Vice Leader William Kunze said:

"I take his (Kuhn's) place where he cannot be personally, but Fritz Kuhn is the leader of the German-American Bund and will continue to be.

"This fight will be continued and we will go on until hell freezes. But we can not go on unless large sums of money are available."

Meanwhile, Kuhn was held in Tombs prison.

The meeting was guarded by a score of patrolmen. The hall was decorated with large American flags and Nazi swastikas and at the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" many of the men and women wavered between the Nazi upraised arm salute and the American manner of touching the forehead. It finally became unanimous—the American way.

Kuhn named Kunze his provisional successor several weeks ago.

Japan Claims Britain Broke Her Promise

Nazi Export Pledge Made Before New Mine Warfare, London Replies

By Hugh Byas,

Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, Nov. 30.—The manner in which the British blockade is applied is all important in the view of Japanese officials, and the government intends to observe the export blockade in action before deciding upon the next step.

Negotiations upon this point are proceeding between Ambassador Shigemitsu and Lord Halifax in London.

Japan is extremely interested in the arrival of German machinery for extraction of oil from coal in Manchuria, and Ambassador Shigemitsu had this in mind when he obtained a promise from Great Britain that no action would be taken against German exports to Japan.

Japanese now complain that this promise was broken, but the British reply that the promise was made before Germany began its "new style" mining warfare.

The British Ambassador, Sir Robert Leslie Craigie, today gave a full explanation to Foreign Minister Nomura, who replied that Japan reserved all rights as a neutral.

The press insists that the British action violates international law, and declares if negotiations fail Japan will oppose it.

U. S. Destroyer Runs Aground

The Navy announced yesterday that the destroyer Reuben James of the Atlantic neutrality patrol had run aground on north Cuba, about 15 miles off Lobos Cay light.

The commander of the ship reported there were no casualties and that the aircraft carrier Ranger was standing by. Two tugs were ordered to the spot.

Capper Favors Farm Certificates

By International News Service

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, veteran farm bloc leader, last night indorsed the so-called "certificate plan" under which processors of agricultural products would pay the bounty of $500,000,000 now given to farmers by the Federal Government.

Sensing a trend toward economy in appropriations, farm belt leaders in Congress said they had found support growing for the certificate plan.

Indian Claim to Niagara Wealth Considered Not So Fantastic

U. S. Officials Admit Senecas Actually Have a Case; Ickes Recommends They Be Heard in Connection With Power Petition

By Alfred Friendly

The claim of the Seneca Indians to the huge wealth of Niagara Falls, mentioned in this space some weeks ago, is beginning to appear much less fantastic than it sounds. Officials concerned, both at the Indian Office and Federal Power Commission, have admitted that the Indians actually have a case.

In brief, the Seneca Tribe claims ownership of the Niagara River bed and the lands adjacent to it, dating from a treaty ratified by the Continental Congress. Massachusetts received preemption rights on the lands to the east, New York on the lands to the west. The Senecas claim that although Massachusetts exercised its rights and acquired title, New York did not, and had no right to grant proper title to the Niagara Falls Power Co., now operating an industry valued at hundreds of millions of dollars at the Falls.

Secretary Ickes yesterday announced that he had recommended that the FPC give "every opportunity to the Seneca Nation to present its claim in connection with an application of the power concern, now pending before the FPC, to use additional waters of the Niagara River.

Collegians are chafing at the requirements of a recently announced civil-service examination for editorial clerks, the first such examination in four years. It prescribes two years of practical experience, but allows college study to be substituted for one and one-half years. This leaves a minimum experience requirement of six months. Formerly the whole experience period was substitutable by an equal amount of time in college study of English.

Barred from eligibility, it is claimed, are graduates of English courses who have devoted special study to editing, but who have never had practical experience.

The first of the anticipated shake-ups in the former Commerce Department foreign service, now under State Department administration, will soon be forthcoming. William E. Dunn, former assistant director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, will be transferred from Buenos Aires, where he is commercial attaché, and sent to Guatemala. The move may be considered an elevation for Dunn, but only of 5,000 feet in altitude. His place at Buenos Aires will be taken by Thomas L. Hughes.

Archie Robertson, Washington newspaperman, is the author of a book just published, called "The Government at Your Service." It tells how to do everything from getting a Federal job to getting a pamphlet on infant care . . . Employes of the WPA Index, U. S. Employes Compensation Commission, this week celebrated the handling and indexing of the one-millionth WPA injury claim . . . Agriculture employes complain that they are often publicly referred to as "agricultural employes." Why not call workers in the Labor and Commerce departments "Laborious employes" and "Commercial employes," respectively, they ask? O. K.—why not?

The Labor Department's reason for recently querying the Comptroller General on the legal date of Wage-Hour Administrator Andrews' resignation was to find out if an acting administrator's orders would stand up under legal scrutiny until a permanent administrator was named and confirmed at the next session of Congress.

Col. Philip Fleming, the choice for the job, cannot be appointed until Congress makes a special provision for an Army officer on active duty to accept the civil position. Until then, Assistant Administrator Jacobs is serving as "acting administrator." Labor legalists are debating whether they must make Jacobs something more than acting administrator, in a temporary tenure only, until Fleming can take over nominally as well as actually.

Texas Aggies Trounce Texas, 20-0, in Rain

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Read this, please. It may save a life, honest. Or several lives. The District of Columbia Tuberculosis Association needs your pennies to combat the unseen germ that moves among you—and we do mean you.

For every policeman you see on the District streets, there are ten persons carrying the dread tuberculosis germ in Washington, either knowingly or unwittingly. That's the estimate of the District Health Department which puts the number of carriers at 5,000. Only the moronic can laugh that off.

POVICH

Today the D. C. Tuberculosis Association puts on sale its annual Christmas seals. Please buy some. Your contribution, and yours and yours will cut down a tuberculosis death rate that is shaming the Capital. Among cities of more than 100,000 persons, Washington has the second highest percentage of tuberculosis death rates per capita. No kidding, you are truly menaced.

The Christmas seals you buy are the very life blood of the battle against the dread T. B. On the march behind medical treatment is the D. C. Association's program of educating the public, both white and colored, to the dread presence of the disease. For the tardy ones already afflicted, is the association's health camps and rehabilitation departments. With your pennies are financed the free X-ray service for the underprivileged and indigent.

Even Athletes Are Susceptible to Disease

Utterly unpredictable is the direction in which tuberculosis may strike. None is immune. Present good health is no barrier to tuberculosis. Its germs destroy good health. Every tuberculosis ward in Washington is filled, honest. And walking the streets are folks who should be in them. And the purchase of Christmas seals will carry your message to them.

Sports page readers should be particularly aware of the dread savagery of the disease. Able-bodied athletes are susceptible. A long list of sports heroes afflicted by the germ, yes and who died from it, is testimony that it can happen to the healthiest among you.

What are we to think, what security is there for any of us when such as Johnny Stone, Washington outfielder, is stricken and forced to give up his profession. Of all the sturdy, rugged men in baseball, Johnny Stone appeared to be as immune from tuberculosis as any other. He came into baseball as a husky lad from the farm with a strapping physique and habits that were exemplary. That he would be a tuberculosis victim was scarcely thinkable.

But he was. And the suddenness with which the germ can strike, the inroads it can make are illustrated strikingly in the case of Johnny Stone. In April of 1938, his sensational batting, his fleet gallops after fly balls won him The Washington Post award as the Most Valuable Player of the month to the Washington Club. In May Johnny Stone was in a Saranac sanitarium broken in health and facing a long battle for its recovery.

He's recovering, but doctors have told him never to stand when he can sit down. He knows the things that T. B. can do to a fellow. And he's coming to Washington later in the month to go on the radio and tell Washington people that tuberculosis can happen to the most unsuspecting. Johnny Stone will say he's lucky; lucky that modern medical science could check for him a disease that last year killed 588 Washingtonians.

Mathewson Won Health, Only to Lose It

But medical science would have been quite helpless in the absence of Johnny Stone's firm resolve to help lick the disease himself, and Stone will say that, too, even as the late Christy Mathewson said it on the day they ordered him to Saranac.

Mathewson, too, was a strapping lad from the farm, but the influenza that ravaged the A. E. F. in France paved the way for tuberculosis. The doctors told him the rules when they sent him to Saranac. He had to lie quietly in bed, accept every order and follow the last details of the instructions of his physician. And Matty, the courageous pitcher who never flinched on the mound, said:

"You give the signs, doctor, and I'll pitch your way."

Matty won his battle with the disease, only to lose it again. In his eagerness to warn others of the dread germ, he traveled everywhere to make speeches or lend a hand to a worthy cause. No flesh or blood or character or courage could stand the strain under which Matty was laboring, and the health he had rewon, he lost again.

There was famed Hughey Jennings, pennant-winning manager of the Tigers, and star of the Old Baltimore Orioles. He fell a fatal victim to tuberculosis. And Joe Gans, the lightweight champion of the world, who died at 36, a tuberculosis victim. And George (Rube) Waddell, famed pitcher of his time, who died at 37 from the ravages of the disease.

Now new methods of treatment have been found. Doctors and nurses are gaining on the disease. An educational program is beating the germ to the punch. And Christmas seals are playing an important part in the winning of the battle. This is no time to quit. Please buy Christmas seals.

AGAINST THE LINE:

Mr. Considine: You've Hurt Our Feelings

By Al Hailey

Memo to Bob Considine:

Those words you were hurling around the other day in your column about the Army and the Navy football teams irk us inhabitants down here and at once types you as a person who either got up on the wrong side of the bed that day or who is possessed of a world-weary and calloused mind.

HAILEY

This sector was taken aback, nonplussed and downright disgusted with your theme, old man—you seem to have missed the true meaning, that intangible something which makes an Army-Navy game one of the greatest and most heart-warming spectacles of the football year.

Twelve paragraphs—30 sentences you used in belittling a contest which not only is dear to the hearts of a sports-loving Nation but is first and foremost in the hearts of thousands of men in the service all over the world.

You Make Your Own Indictment

How you can, as you put it, "see those teams now, locked in a titanic contest of left-footedness, lame-brained technique and general inefficiency" is something which you alone seem to be capable of doing. At any rate, old man, you should never speak in that vein, for it makes your visionary ability sound a bit warped—if not just plain deluded.

There was one sentence in all that blather of opinion which made sense to us in this sector, who in our small way—so you might put it—somehow get a thrill just thinking about being one of those 102,000 persons who will watch the teams of Army and Navy take the field tomorrow in Philadelphia. Maybe you recall saying:

"It's no crime to be as bad as Army and Navy are this year."

If you don't remember, we'd like to remind you that this sentence—the twenty-first in your treatise—is enough to hang you, old man. As a matter of fact, it's your self-indictment.

Perchance you didn't know it, but the Army and Navy are making no claims that they are such "great shakes" on the gridiron—if you'll pardon that humble colloquialism.

Army and Navy Possess Loyalty

Just the same, the Army and Navy supporters aren't the kind to turn tail on their teams because they haven't burned up the opposition all season. There is a bulwark of fierce loyalty of the Army and Navy supporters for their teams that defies vilification.

You can call it a "comic valentine" team if you like, Bob—that's your opinion. Personally, we in this sector have branded you as Grade A material for the peaked cap and the high stool in the corner of the room.

In fact, there's a movement under foot to keep you after school and make you write "Army-Navy Game" 500 times.

As we see it, the Army and the Navy are not "skinning" the customers. A scant 430,000 of the "indignant public" you so sarcastically mentioned applied for tickets to the affair, if you will but recall.

Only 102,000 or so were lucky enough to obtain tickets at the $4.40 prices which seemed to have you near a state of hysteria. And when those Midshipmen—2,400 strong—and these Cadets—some 1,700 of them—march into that vast Municipal Stadium there will be a lump of pride in 102,000 throats—and we'll give you odds on that.

And They're Real Amateurs

The football itself may not be up to your professional standards—the boys of Army and Navy are real amateurs, "simon-pures" all who play for the love of the game. There's no discrimination in favor of football players at Annapolis or West Point—they have to be of special mental caliber to live up to the stiffest of scholastic requirements. So it would seem that your "lame-brained" attack is a bit unjustified and groundless.

We are not rushing in to carry the torch for Army or Navy—we know their teams aren't world beaters. We are just hurt by your attitude, old man, and we say to you: "For shame."

What we say here probably will be remembered a day or two—there's only one thing that comes to mind that indicates how much longer those 60 minutes of play in Philadelphia will be remembered. That's a line spoken by Abraham Lincoln in a speech he made. It somehow is appropriate for the football fields on which Army and Navy men have played.

"The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract."

40,000 See A.&M. Finish Undefeated

Trick Play Leads To 1st Touchdown; Texans Are Stopped Rushing and in Air

By the Associated Press

College Station, Tex., Nov. 30.—Mighty Texas A. & M. powered its way to an unbeaten season and the gates of a Bowl game today, burying University of Texas, 20-0, in the mud of old Kyle Field. They clinched the Southwest Conference title last week.

Football's "country boy" play, the old sideline hide-out, gave the massive farmers a start that produced three touchdowns in the last two periods while 40,000 shivered in rain and fog.

Shackled the first half by Texas' sophomore rascals and one of the oddest happenings of the football season, the Aggies waited no longer than the kickoff of the third period to start their skull-duggery.

Score on Pass

Over on the sideline, flattened to the mud, lay Earl (Bama) Smith, a tricky substitute halfback who hasn't played 15 minutes all season. On the first scrimmage play he streaked down the sideline, caught Walemon Price's diagonal 15-yard pass and worked to the Texas' 27. Big John Kimbrough picked up 5 yards, and then Price wafted a touchdown pass to Sophomore Jim Sterling in the end zone.

Bewildered Texas couldn't hold the Aggies after that.

Only once did Texas, its great cowboy Jack Crain, manacled by vicious Aggie linemen, give the faintest appearance of threatening to score, getting down to the Aggie 16 late in the game after Bill Connatser's kick had been partially blocked. Until then, the Aggie 43 was its best effort.

The Texans had a net gain of only 26 yards rushing while their passing tries wound up in the red by 2 yards. The Aggies piled up 204 yards on runs and passes.

Deep in the third period Price, an amazing thrower of wet footballs, loosed a 30-yard pass to little Herbie Smith the Aggies' 5 foot, 7 inch end, and he carried on 9 more yards to the Texas 3. Conatser plunged for the score.

The third Aggies touchdown came in a gift wrapping. While Crain's arching punt from his own 15 was in the air, officials called a foul on a free ball, ejecting Center Thayer, of Texas, from the game and giving the Farmers the ball on the Texas 15.

Conatser swept both ends on two thrusts to the 1-foot line, and Kimbrough smashed across with a touchdown that made him the Southwest Conference's leading scorer.

How It Happened

The Aggies reached the 4-yard stripe on the last play of the first period, but a strange incident prevented even a chance to score.

Just as Conatser slipped to the 4, after setting up the scoring threat with a 2-yard run, the period ended. Drowned out by the roar of 6,000 cadets and partisan Aggies, the sideline timekeeper's meek horn sounded before Conatser rode close to the goal line.

The timer hurriedly reached in his pocket, pulled a gun and fired before the Aggies could line up for the next play. Officials crowded on the field and decided that time had actually expired before Conatser's run. Then Conatser bobbled a low pass from center, a new attack failed and Texas kicked out of danger.

Redskins Pitch Camp, Ordered to Act Dumb

Beware Giants' 'Razzing Squad,' Flaherty Warns Men in Sumptuous Rye, N. Y., Club; Polo Grounds Sold Out for Game Sunday

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Rye, N. Y., Nov. 30.—Here in the sumptuous surroundings of the Westchester Country Club where they set up their training camp tonight, the Washington Redskins received orders from Coach Ray Flaherty to keep their mouths shut.

It was bluntly said by Flaherty but it was no rebuke to the Redskins. The order does not apply until Sunday, when they meet the Giants for the Eastern Division championship of the National Football League.

The Redskins' coach merely told his men to let actions speak louder than words when they line up against the Giants at the Polo Grounds. He said:

"Those Giants haven't changed much. They're the greatest bunch of jockeys in the league. They'll try to get your goat with insults. It's an old trick of the Giants to try to make the opposing team mad. There are five or six fellows in the Giants' line who are old hands at razzing the team they play.

Pinckert Pet Target

"Don't fall for that stuff. Let the Giants talk their heads off if they like. Don't talk back to 'em. The best way to keep 'em still is to bang 'em down. I don't want to see any Redskin in an argument except a physical one."

The pet target of the Giants' razzing brigade is Ernie Pinckert, hard-hitting blocking back of the Redskins. "In Washington in the opening game of the season they started on me even before the game began," said Pinckert. "We're dopes if we fall for their tricks."

In another respect, Ray Flaherty considers the New York team as the same old Giants and that is why he is not underestimating them as Sunday's game approaches.

"The Redskins have changed but the Giants haven't," said Flaherty.

Potsy Clark Resigns as Dodger Pilot

Resignation Takes Effect Immediately; No Plans at Present

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 30.—George (Potsy) Clark announced today his resignation as head coach of the Brooklyn Dodgers, of the National Football League.

His resignation, tendered to Owner Dan Topping, takes effect immediately, though his three-year contract does not expire until January 1. Clark, who has been coaching in the National League for nine years, said he planned to remain in the coaching profession, but did not reveal any definite plans.

Except for his three seasons with the Dodgers, Clark's teams always were in the thick of the championship race. His Portsmouth (Ohio) teams were runner-ups for three seasons, and with Detroit in 1934 he won ten straight, to finish in the same spot. The following year he Piloted Detroit to the league championship.

Before entering the National League, Potsy coached at Butler and Kansas University.

Blocked Punt, Fumbles Lead to Tarheel Score in Renewal of South's Oldest Grid Rivalry Before 18,000 at Chapel Hill

By the Associated Press

Chapel Hill, N. C., Nov. 30.—Two costly Virginia fumbles and a blocked punt set the North Carolina Tarheels up today for a 19-to-0 victory in the forty-fourth renewal of the South's oldest rivalry.

Eighteen thousand Thanksgiving Day fans watched the Tarheels outplay the Virginians.

A fumble by Jim Gillette, of Virginia, made possible the first Tarheel score midway the first quarter. George Radman fell on the ball on the Virginia 10. George Stirnweiss failed to gain, then Radman passed to Paul Severin for six. Sid Sadoff smashed through guard for four and touchdown.

Two minutes later Walter Smith, of Virginia, fumbled, Paul Severin grabbed the ball for the Tarheels 30 yards from the goal. Stirnweiss passed to Sadoff for 20. Stirnweiss then got eight in two tries after Connor lost one, Stirnweiss circled right end for 3 yards to score.

The Virginians gave about as good as they took then for two periods, and held an offensive edge for a few minutes in the third quarter.

Early in the fourth period, however, Bill Dudley, of Virginia, tried to quick kick from about his 30 and Bill Faircloth's body was in the way. Dick White scooped up

Vols' 22d Consecutive Triumph

Victors Practically Write Own Passport Into Rose Bowl; 20,000 See Game

By the Associated Press

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 30.—Tennessee's ever-winning Volunteers smashed down the Kentucky Wildcats, 19-0, at Stoll Field today for their twenty-second consecutive victory, and practically wrote their own passport into the Rose Bowl.

They were impressive, the big, hard-hitting boys of Coach Robert Neyland. Against a traditional foe that was geared to fighting pitch, the Volunteers piled down the field with amazing ease to score two touchdowns in the opening period, and then, with second and third string men dominating their line-up, shoved across another for good measure in the closing quarter.

20,000 See Game

A packed little crowd of 20,000 saw the Volunteers win nearly as they pleased. They knocked the Wildcats groggy at the outset and then played with them. Kentucky, with a promising sophomore team—and very hopeful—gained ground galore around the middle of the field and once made a genuine scoring threat. But when they got too fresh the Tennessee's reared up and cuffed them back.

Furthermore, Tennessee did it without any help from its big star, "Bad News" George Cafego. George started and was rather prominent for a couple of plays, but then had to retire to the bench with his injured knee and brood. Possibly he brooded because his replacements looked so good.

Vols Look "Terrific"

While rambling through the Kentucky line, those Vol backs looked terrific. Buist Warren, Sam Bartholomew, Fred Newman, Johnny Butler and Bob Foxx took turns sifting through the befuddled Wildcats. The blocking in front of them was beautiful, and their net gain by rushing was 166 yards. Tennessee compiled only 11 first downs against Kentucky's 15, but the figures are misleading. The Volunteers struck with a purpose, while the Wildcats burned and stewed too near the 50-yard line.

This was the thirteenth straight game in which the Volunteers held their opposition scorless, which is a good record against any sort of team, including the Boy Scouts. Their closest scrape today came in the second period, when two straight 15-yard penalties for roughness against Tennessee gave Kentucky the ball 6 yards from a touchdown. Happily for the record, Shepherd, of Kentucky, fumbled at their vital point and Tennessee recovered.

Score Easily

The first two Tennessee touchdowns that broke up the ball game were scored so easily that the Kentucky crowd was frozen into silence. The contest scarcely had started when the Volunteer backs began driving, driving, through their opponents' futile defense.

Cafego had gone out, replaced by Buist Warren, when Tennessee ran a punt back to Kentucky's 41. The Volunteers, without throwing a pass, went from there for their first touchdown—right through Kentucky's line. Newman, Warren and Foxx, a shifty trio, sifted for gain after gain until the ball was planted a yard from the Wildcat goal, and then Bartholomew practically walked across. The Tennessee attack was so deceptive it scarcely could be figured out from the stand. The Kentucky tacklers were helpless.

Intercepts Pass

Within two minutes the Colossus from Knoxville intercepted a pass on Kentucky's 44 and was off and running again. Warren brushed through for 12; Bartholomew made 8 on a lateral; Newman zipped 7; Warren took his turn again, and the pigskin was on Kentucky's 14. Newman took the ball from center, handed it to Foxx, and Foxx bulleted through a yawning gap on the right side for a touchdown. That sewed up the decision, and Coach Neyland began sending in third stringers.

From there on, taking the figures at face value, Kentucky had the best of things. The Wildcats trotted out a sophomore named Ermal Allen who could pass like a dream, and a runner named Junior Jones who could scat. In the second quar-

Navy Leaves for Army Game Midst Cheers, Songs, Bonfires

Midshipmen Wild on Team's Departure; Larson and Bergner Give Victory Talk

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Nov. 30.—With nary an alibi in a carload, 43 Navy varsity football players entrained tonight for Philadelphia to keep their historic date with the Army gridders Saturday.

They left behind a seething town and a regiment of football-daffy midshipmen. From their train windows they could see the leaping flames of three mammoth "get-a-victory" bonfires lighted at a pep rally that shook the academy walls just before they left.

Retired officers who have watched Navy gridmen go to the football wars for 30 years said they never had seen the academy so "steamed up" on the eve of an Army-Navy game.

Midshipmen were fairly bubbling with enthusiasm. They sang between classes. Little knots of them rehearsed yells in the yard during free periods. They turned out in admiring droves for the final practice session.

Whispering Campaign

They exploded, finally, in an incandescent glow of mass emotion at the bonfire rally.

This town-shaking demonstration was accorded a team which has had a disasterous season. Navy has won two little games, tied one and dropped five major contests in a row.

But the regiment rallied. Navy Coach Swede Larson said, when the going got toughest. Earlier there were whispered rumors that the regiment as a whole was indifferent to the fate of the football warriors. They didn't have the old Navy fight, the buzz-buzz claimed.

United Front

The whispered canard incensed the regiment. Tonight they "showed 'em."

"The team has a whole lot more football in 'em than they've played this season," Larson said, "after this show of a Navy 'united front' it's going to come out Saturday. We're going up to Philadelphia to win."

Capt. Al Bergner, Navy tackle, said, "we've had too much chance to show we were good losers this year. But it's still a Navy year, and we're going to show you we can be winners at Philly."

They spoke beneath a flood-lighted banner inscribed "it can—it shall be done. Beat Army!"

Larson said there were no changes in his previously announced starting line-up.

Army Entrains For Philadelphia

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 30 (AP).—With plenty of bathrobes, sweaters and caps, traditional legal tender in Army-Navy betting circles, laid on the line, the Cadet football squad departed tonight for Philadelphia and its annual conflict with Navy.

Coach Bill Wood and Capt. Harry Stella led the group of 38 players out of the academy as the remainder of the corps of 1,800 lined the sidewalks and cheered.

Short Practice

A short practice was held this afternoon, with all of the players nosily showing off their high spirits during drills in kick-offs, punting and passing. The team was to stay at Pine Valley Country Club outside Philadelphia tonight, work out at Municipal Stadium tomorrow, and then hole up again at the country club until Saturday afternoon.

Hoping to wipe out the failures of a mediocre season with a triumph over their service rivals, the Cadets gave every evidence of determination as they set forth for the game. The squad was in its best physical shape of the season.

Line-up Named

Coach Wood announced his probable line-up would be Fred Yeager, New York City, and Carl Helmstetter, Dermott, Ark. ends; Capt. Stella, Kankakee, Ill., and Ted Michel, St. Paul, tackles; Jim Rooney, New Orleans, and Ray Murphy, Anaconda, Mont., guards; Bill Gillis, Tevarkana, Tex., center; and Bob Evans, Joplin, Mo., John Hatch, Fort Sill, Okla., Jim Dubulsson, Opelausas, La., and Art Frontczak, Dowagiac, Mich., backs.

Of this crew, Stella, Frontczak, Dubisson and Yeager are seniors. Gillis is a junior and the other six are sophomores.

The Citadel Routs Wofford

Edwards made all three of the Cadet touchdowns, snagging a pass from Browning for the first score and plunging the line in the first and third quarters for the other two.

Hauser Sets Season Mark At Queen Pin

Rolls 161 Game; 1,881 Set by Brinkley Team Shatters League Record

A season record and an all-time league mark were thrown into the discard at the Queen Pin Alleys in the Southeast Bowling League last night. The season record was established by Ernie Hauser's 161 game, while the all-time league record was rolled by Brinkley's, an 1,881 team set.

Instrumental in the team set record was Hauser's 161 game and 402 set, Elmer Mead's 142-378, Lou Bonbrest's 370 and Bill Costigan's 366. Brad Manley's 353 was to no avail when his City Banking Co. five was smothered under the deluge of pin spilling of the Brinkley quintet—to lose all 3 games.

Recreation

With only one game separating the first place team from the fourth, the Department Store League continued its close play last night at Recreation Alleys with Garfinckel's winning two from Goldenberg's and taking first place over the three-way tie for the runner-up spot. Dick Bausch led the winners with 362.

Irwin Simon and Bob Sproul turned in respective 395 and 362 sets for Kann's but they lost the odd tilt to Lansburgh's. Raleigh Haberdasher and Woodward & Lothrop moved into the second place tie with Kann's. Credit Bureau tried to get out of last place with an odd game triumph over the Hecht Co.

PETWORTH

Chi Sigma's No. 1 and 3 teams moved into a first-place tie in the Inter-sorority League at Petworth, with 23 victories against 4 defeats. Mildred "Stimmie" Hart took over the high average spot with a 103 mark. The night's leaders were Becky Baker, of Beta Chi No. 1, with a 329 set, and Clara Dikeman, of Alpha Zeta Beta No. 1, with a 119 game.

ARCADIA

High game in the Veterans' Administration Ladies' League at Arcadia was a tie between Hazel Hennrick and Celia Kartiznell, with 121, while the latter captured high set for the night with 335. Accounting had a 510 game and Dependents Claims a 1,498 team set.

Jack Halton's 166 game for Washington Aqueduct was the highlight of the War Department League at Arcadia, while Charles VanHorn, of Hydros, had a 378 set. The Aqueduct pinmen were tops—in team game and set, with respective 623 and 1,725 totals.

Irene Scott tossed powerful game and set figures of 133 and 377 in the Federal Ladies League at Arcadia, while the team honors went to I. C. C. with a 550 game and a three-game total of 1,526.

MOUNT RAINIER

Mel Tallant's 161 game and 424 set in the Mount Rainier League figured in a three-game sweep for Russell Motors over Mayor and Council. Tallant's set total was third highest of the year. John's Restaurant led the teams with a game of 630 and set of 1,827, led by Pfeil's 147-407.

Nowaskey's Dad Hopes to See G.W. Win for a Change

Bob Nowaskey's dad has never seen G. W. win a game since Bob enrolled at the downtown institution, but he hasn't given up hope. He'll be in the stands at Morgantown tomorrow when Bob winds up his collegiate career against West Virginia.

The elder Nowaskey saw both George Washington-West Virginia games in which Bob participated in his sophomore and junior years, but the Mountaineers won both. Last year he also saw the G. W.-Mississippi game in which the Colonials were beaten.

He believes he may be a jinx to the Colonials, but is willing to take another chance tomorrow which will be his last.

Cox Repulses Fans and Then Wins Mat Bout

After repulsing three attacks from ringside spectators, Joe Cox, the old "Kansas Krasher," defeated Abie Coleman last night in Turner's arena with eight well-placed kicks and a leglock after 35 minutes of the scheduled 90-minute exhibition.

Cox fulfilled wrestling emporium habitues fondest dreams of a villain on which to vent their ire, and they went at him from all sides.

First it was a spectator wishing to put a headlock on Joe in midring. Joe picked him up and tossed him out to his seat. Then a woman with a crowbar-like instrument advanced but retreated. Another woman threatened with her shoe held high in the air. The usual riot that came as Cox left the ring was also a victory for Joe—he held the mob at bay with a neat display of fierce grimaces.

Employing a flying tackle he picked up some 20 years ago at Dartmouth, Gus Sonnenberg pinned Rudy Strongberg in 13 minutes of the semifinal. Bibber McCoy beat George Lenihan in 23 minutes; Jack Hader and Bob Wagner drew, and Alan Eustace beat Mary Hoesly in 22 minutes in the supporting numbers.

Colored Fights Tonight To Be for Chest Fund

Army-Navy Pasteboards 'Free' With Two Burlesque Tickets

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Nov. 30.—Some of the ticket speculating fraternity did a "scrip tease" today in an effort to get around Government regulation against resale of Army-Navy football tickets at more than the authorized price—$4.40 each.

Ducats for Saturday's game in Municipal Stadium were "free" to fans who would buy 50-cent burlesque show tickets—at $10 and up a pair.

A few of the wise boys also tried to avoid the Federal decree against scalping by attaching tickets to 25-cent boxes of candy and 10-cent neckties. The ties and candy sold for $10—the tickets were passed along as "gifts."

Despite such tricks, takers were as scarce as betters willing to give heavy odds on Navy. Most prospective customers demanded guarantees that if turned away at the gate for holding resold tickets the brokers would give their money back.

Speculators shuffled stacks of unsold tickets like playing cards and woefully admitted that the campaign against profiteering seems successful. Nevertheless, "sandwich men" paraded Broad street with signs telling where to "get your Army-Navy tickets."

"If the Government intended to do anything like this," one speculator complained, "why didn't they stop individuals from coming here and selling us the tickets at a profit to themselves?"

Revenue agents posted in the offices of licensed ticket brokers are seeing to it that all tickets bought through these channels are stamped "resold" and list the resale price. If the purchase price was more than $4.40, the holder will be turned away at the gate, officials declare.

G. W. Gridders Leave Today For West Va.

George Washington, Mountaineers Close Seasons Tomorrow

Seeking their first victory over West Virginia in three years and determined to close the season with another triumph, George Washington University's gridders will depart for Morgantown this morning at 9 o'clock.

The Colonial squad will travel only as far as Uniontown, Pa., today where a workout is scheduled in the late afternoon. The party will move on to Morgantown tomorrow morning.

Several members of the George Washington squad who come from Pennsylvania towns not far removed from Morgantown have been looking forward to this game all season. They will play before members of their families and friends, and will also oppose high school teammates who are members of the West Virginia squad.

Bob and Art Nowaskey, of Scottsdale, Pa.; Eddie Milamoski and John Kokoski, of Ambridge, Pa.; Mike Monchlovich, of Carmichael, Pa., and Walter Welc, of Mount Pleasant, regard this game as a sort of homecoming.

The squad members who graduate next June are Bob and Art Nowaskey, Sunny Jones, Duce Keahey, Billy Richardson and Ralph Zelaska.

West Virginia will celebrate "Rodgers Day" on Saturday in honor of Ira Rodgers, the school's only all-America, who was selected as fullback on Walter Camp's team in 1919. Rodgers, former head coach at his alma mater, has been on the campus as student and coach for 25 years.

ter this combination once ate up 61 yards down the field. Late in the third period the same pair started from their own 7 line and went 68 yards before Tennessee held, but nothing came of all this, and when the Wildcats' relaxed from their labors Tennessee scored again.

Dave Zoeller, of Kentucky, fumbled after taking a punt early in the closing chapter, and a swarm of yellow-jerseyed Tennessees covered the ball on the Wildcats' 14. Butler plunged to the 10, then faded back and completed a pass to Emil Hust in the end zone. Hust outfighting a couple of defenders for the ball. This time (Newman and Foxx having flubbed their placement tries after the first two touchdowns) Thompson flipped a pass to Wallen for the extra point.

Tennessee didn't need to use the pass as a major weapon, with its backs able to tear Kentucky apart almost at will, but the Vols proved they could be very handy with the aerial weapon. At odd moments they completed five out of eight attempts for a gain of 41 yards. Kentucky completed 18 out of 30 for 139 yards.

Pat Comisky Beats Daniels by TKO in 6th

New Jersey Irishman Carries Fight Forward From 1st Bell in Baltimore For 22d Victory by Knockout

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Nov. 30.—Patrick Edward Comiskey, the youthful Jersey giant, added his twenty-fourth straight ring victory tonight when he battered Maynard Daniels, husky Manteo, N. C., former Marine, to a sixth-round technical knockout.

Comiskey, booed by ring experts as one of the Nation's prime heavyweight hopefuls, tore into Daniels at the first bell, staggering him with rights and lefts to the face and closing the Marine's left eye.

Daniels, game but outclassed and with only one eye working, was on the defensive from the second round on, until Referee Charlie Short called off the punishment as Daniels went to his corner after the sixth. The bout was scheduled for eight rounds.

The K. O. gave Comiskey his twenty-second win via the knockout route. He weighed in at 203 pounds to Daniels' 193. Daniels himself had won 28 straight fights, 20 by knockouts.

Other results:

New York Rangers Swamp Chicago Black Hawks, 7-2

By International News Service

Chicago, Nov. 30.—With their offensive warning up as the game progressed, the New York Rangers swamped the Chicago Black Hawks, 7 to 2, tonight in the Chicago Stadium to advance into a second place tie with the Montreal Canadiens in the National Hockey League.

The New Yorkers clearly outclassed the Black Hawks as they scored once in the first period, twice in the second and then banged in four goals in the final session. Chicago counted in the first and last periods before 11,443.

Americans Upset Montreal Canadiens

New York, Nov. 30 (AP).—The Cellarite New York Americans turned the tables on the Montreal Canadiens tonight with a 5-to-2 victory in a National Hockey League game watched by 8,500 fans.

The injury-riddled Amerks came from behind with two quick goals in the second period and then added two within nine seconds in the final period to chalk up their second straight victory—also their second win of the season in eight games played.

G. W. Frosh Star Is Out for Season

George Washington University's freshman basketball team suffered a severe loss yesterday when it was learned that Jim Myers, all-State star from Evansville, Ind., is lost for the season, due to an injury.

Myers broke a bone in his ankle during a scrimmage mix-up Tuesday night. A university physician revealed yesterday that Jim is probably out for the season.

Myers is from Bosse High, Evansville, and is regarded as an outstanding prospect.

DeZerne Seeks A. A. U. Boxing Title Tonight

Eighteen-year-old George DeZerne, who goes ahuntin' for the District A. A. U. 112-pound senior championship tonight at Turner's Arena isn't merely an ordinary pillow-pusher, investigation of his record reveals, but an interesting young man with musical and Army careers behind him numerous and vistas of new adventures stretching before him.

Young DeZerne, who is as English as a broad A despite his French name, signed up with Uncle Sam's fighting forces with the idea of going to West Point, but this venture came to sudden grief. The colonel discovered George had enlisted while not quite 16, strictly against the rules in the best armies, and told him to come back in two years.

Victor 15 Times

While stationed at nearby Fort Belvoir the youngster went in for athletics on a major scale and won a small measure of fame as an all-around athlete. He was a better-than-average football, basketball and baseball player, but liked boxing best of all. He scaled around 118 pounds and was the best at his weight on the post.

Before joining the Army, George lived in Kansas City, Mo., and there studied music and played clarinet in the All-City Band four years. He still tootles the horn and has played in local orchestras since coming to this city. A confirmed addict of good music he manages to attend most of the Sunday symphony concerts and also hears the better-known artists when they appear here in recitals.

As a boxer DeZerne has won his spurs in District amateur circles, reaching the finals of last year's Golden Gloves tournament. He was outpointed by Leonard Lehrner in the finals of the 112-pound class in a bout decided in the last half of the last round. In 20 interclub bouts he has emerged victorious 15 times and has never been on the floor, and he fervently hopes he won't experience that sensation tonight.

Good Athlete

But DeVerne has seen his opponent, Danny Petro, in action several times, and while conceding that Danny has a good punch and is aggressive, thinks he has a 50-50 chance of copping the first senior crown to be awarded.

This bout features a star-studded card consisting wholly of quarter and semifinal duels.

Toronto Plays Eagles Tonight

The colorful Toronto Canadians, fresh from a 9-to-1 rout of the Jersey Skeeters and a 4-to-2 overtime victory over the Baltimor Orioles, invade Riverside Stadium tonight for an 8:30 o'clock Eastern Amateur Hockey League game with Redvers ("Red") Mackenzie's Washington Eagles.

The Canadians, a finalist in the Eastern Canadian Hockey Tournament last season, are bringing to Riverside one of the finest box office attractions in ice hockey and a team loaded down with the finest talent in the Dominion.

Washingtonians, enthused over the Eagles' 2-to-1 upset over the champion New York Rovers last Tuesday night, are expected to test the 4,500 seating capacity at Riverside tonight for one of the brightest attractions on the early season home schedule.

On the basis of their fine record the Canadians will rule a slight favorite tonight, although the Eagles are conceded a fine chance of springing another surprise. Len Burrage, veteran Eagle defenseman just returned from a three-year stay in England, will bolster the locals while gallant Gordie Lee, 13.-pound goalie and hero of the recent Rover and Baltimore Oriole victories, also will be a potent package in Washington's stand.

Eagles Lose To River Vale Golfers, 3-2

District Hockey Team Upset by Early Game Attack

Special Dispatch to The Post

River Vale, N. J., Nov. 30.—The River Vale, golfers of the Eastern Amateur Hockey League defeated the Washington Eagles here tonight, 3-2.

Reversing their recent loss to the MacKenziemen by a count of 7-0 at the Capitol, the Golfers showed plenty of offensive power early in the game and a goal total which went with it that the Eagles were unable to match.

Washington dominated the play throughout the entire third period with Hal Dewey, Roy Covert, Len Burrage and Bill Davies making repeated sorties. Dewey converted a pass from Covert after little more than one minute of action but sensational play in the nets on the part of Hemming prevented further scoring.

River Vale opened hostilities when Squee Allen took a pass from McGregor for a shot on which Gord Lee didn't have a chance. Less than two minutes later Ken Partis went down center ice drawing the defense aside and then passed to Mike Germann who counted over Hemming for the tieing marker. The teams left the ice at 1 all. The Golfers made their bid in the second period, sagging the twine twice within three minutes of play midway in the session for a lead the Eagles never were able to surmount.

Though cleanly played, the game saw 30 minutes in penalties meted out by Referee Buckles, the majority of which were to the Golfers. A fracas between McTeer and Allen called for majors, the first in league play here this season.

Cornell Given Trophy as Top Eastern Team

August V. Lambert Award Voted Unbeaten, Untied Ithaeans

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 30.—Cornell's unbeaten, untied football team today was voted the winner of the August V. Lambert Memorial Trophy, annually awarded to the outstanding Eastern eleven of the year.

The vote of the committee, composed of 53 football writers, columnists and radio commentators, was almost unanimous in choosing the big Red eleven as successors to Carnegie Tech, winner of the trophy last year. Though Duquesne, also unbeaten and untied, has one game to play—with Detroit Saturday—the trend to Cornell was so pronounced that it was decided to announce the winner today.

Thus for the first time since the award was first presented in 1936, it leaves Pittsburgh. Pitt's Panthers won in 1936 and 1937, before giving way to Tech last year.

Head Coach Carl Snavely will be presented the trophy at a dinner here Tuesday. President Edmund E. Day of Cornell also announced his intention of attending the dinner.

"The N. B. A.'s bantamweight champion," said Lieut. Col. Harvey L. Miller, president of the association, "is Georgie Pace, of Cleveland. The Salica-Olivera bout is recognized as a title affair only by the California Boxing Commission."

Alabama Beats Vanderbilt, 39-0, in Series Biggest Rout

Runs of 80, 64 Yards Thrill 18,000 Fans

Mosley and Spencer Score on Long Runs; Game Closes Season For Both Elevens

By the Associated Press

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 30.—A touchdown-hungry Alabama football team moved into Dudley Field today for a Thanksgiving Day feast and gorged itself, 39 to 0, with the luckless Vanderbilt eleven footing the bill.

A crowd of more than 18,000 sat under beclouded skies, watching a sluggish Commodore eleven—that had given its all against mighty Tennessee eleven days ago—and a smooth-working band of Red Elephants draw the final curtain on campaigns which were dismally disappointing for both.

It was the worst defeat Vandy ever received at the hands of Alabama in a rivalry that began in 1903.

Pair of Long Runs

Herky Mosley and Paul Spencer brought chilled fans out of their seats with terrific touchdown jaunts of 80 and 64 yards, respectively, both employing a tricky, tantalizing change of pace.

The first two times the Tide took to the air, touchdowns resulted immediately, Mosely pitching one 20 yards behind the goal to Jimmy Nelson early in the first period and flinging another the same distance to the same receiver in the third period.

Pass interceptions, one by Capt. Carey Cox, Alabama center, the other by Jimmy Helm, substitute for Spencer, paved the way for the two last-minute markers.

Spencer Scores

Cox sped 19 yards to the 8 from where Spencer and Mosely thrust away to the 2, with Spencer finally plunging over. Helm's feat consisted of a 28-yard run back to the 18 with less than 3 minutes to go. Vaughan Tollett and Billy Harrell, third-string backs, banked away to the 6 and, with the timer blowing his whistle, Harrell passed to Hal Newman, who fell over the goal line.

The closest Vanderbilt came to scoring was in the first period after Andrus returned the kickoff 36 yards to the 49 and five plays later held the ball on the 24. Junius Plunkett passed to Hardy Housman who juggled the ball on the goal line.

Ignore Giants' Razzing, 'Skins Warned in N.Y.

Camping in Sumptuous Rye Westchester Club; Polo Grounds Sold Out

"As far as I can see, they are the same club that licked us 36-0 last year, and that is enough for me to realize what a battle we've got on our hands. The Giants have only four players who weren't with them last year."

The new quartet of Giants is comprised of Eddie Miller, the sensational lightweight back from New Mexico; the veteran Ken Strong, who has returned to the league after two years in the outlaws; Al Owen, taken back from Cincinnati, and Doug Oldershaw, potent young guard from Santa Clara.

Otherwise the Giants are the same outfit that lambasted the Redskins last season in the Eastern title game. And Flaherty is not attaching too much importance to announcements from the New York camp that Tuffy Leemans and Les Barnum and a host of Giant linemen are seriously handicapped by injuries.

New Faces for 'Skins

The Redskin team which again is bidding for the Eastern title against the Giants is not the same Redskin team of 1938, however. There are no less than 12 new members of the Washington squad, with such as Dick Todd, Jimmy Johnston, Johnny Spirida and Wilbur Moore in the backfield to bolster their scoring punch.

Tomorrow the Redskins will stage the first of their Westchester workouts. They will merely taper off here and move into New York at noon on Sunday. The Giants are working out daily at the Polo Grounds

3-to-5 Favorites

For the first time this season, every man on the Redskin squad is available for action. The return of Jay Turner to the backfield rounds out the best-manned Washington squad Flaherty has been able to put on the field. Charlie Malone, Turk Edwards, Sammy Baugh and Andy Farkas are still nursing minor injuries, but they are all sure-shots to see action.

In New York tonight, the betting odds on the game, as posted by Commissioner Jack Doyle early in the week, are unchanged. The Redskins still rule 3-to-5 favorites, with the price against the Giants quoted at 13 to 10.

Attendance at Sunday's game will exceed the 58,000 crowd which saw last year's battle between the two clubs here. Additional seats placed in the Polo Grounds give the plant a capacity of 60,000. Already sold out except for the 5,000 general admission seats will go on sale Sunday morning, the Polo Grounds will be the scene of the second largest crowd in professional football's history.

Arizona Beats Montana, 6-0, On Blocked Punt

Tucson, Ariz., Nov. 30 (AP).—The University of Arizona Wildcats, listless for three periods, came to life with a brilliant aerial thrust in the closing minutes of play to score a 6-to-0 victory over Montana today before a Thanksgiving crowd of 9,000.

Herb Gartin, substitute Arizona center, set the stage for the touchdown by blocking a Montana punt which Halfback Johnny Black recovered on the Grizzlies' 31. After two line plays failed to gain, Black fired a pass to Quarterback Don Gatchel, who caught the ball on the 10-yard stripe and scored.

The Grizzlies' nearest approach to a score was an advance to the 18-yard line in the second period.

Clark Goff Elected Florida U. Captain

Opelika, Ala., Nov. 30 (AP).—Coach Josh Cody announced tonight that Clark Goff, senior tackle and a native of Pittsburgh, Pa., and been elected honorary captain of the University of Florida football team for the season which ended with today's game against Auburn.

The team waited until the end of the season to elect a captain, meanwhile selecting an honorary captain for each game. Goff, 200-pound, 6-foot 3-inch giant, was named captain for every game this year, however. He was the only senior regular on the squad.

Carnegie Tech Star Secretly Married

Pittsburgh, Nov. 30 (AP).—Merlyn Condit, Carnegie Tech's flashy halfback, disclosed today he was secretly married to Juniata Virginia Winnell, a high school sweetheart, on June 30, 1938.

Both attended high school in Charleston, W. Va., where Mrs. Condit, one-time high school beauty queen, is now employed by a law firm.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 30.—Nothing we could possibly write here could be more damaging to Ken Keltner, the $9,000 a year Cleveland infielder who applied for a $15 a week unemployment dole, than the simple notice that he did so apply. By a baleful coincidence the dope's application was made known the day it was announced that relief in Cleveland had been stopped for 20,000 hungry men, women and children.

CONSIDINE

Keltner is a fine ball player, and perhaps the moral shortcomings which prompted him to try to horn in on the pitiably inadequate relief funds in his native Milwaukee shouldn't be discussed here.

But it's hard to pass over the fact that Keltner's light headed niggardliness is not as unusual as it might sound. With some pretty wonderful exceptions, of course, big league ball players are the cheapest, most tight-fisted, churlish, suspicious bunch of ingrates in sports. As a whole they're pettier than golfers, touchier than A. A. U. officials, tighter than hockey players, and believe more sincerely that they are wards of the public than do tennis bums.

No Stars as Tippers

It didn't take a recent poll of pullman porters and dining car waiters, which named ball players as the poorest tippers making regular use of the steam-cars, to convince a lot of us that the big leaguer who leaves a dime tip, after a $3 meal is usual, not exception. Two bits is a pretty high tip for a player to give a pullman porter who has made his bed, shined his shoes, absorbed his abuse, given him a card table, cleaned up his debris, run his errands hauled out his bags, dusted his clothes and compared him to Ruth.

We were once associated with a Washington hotel that became a kind of sanctuary for visiting clubs and a home base for such members of the Washington Senators as couldn't find a place in the tourist camp and the side street walkups. One year the manager of this elegant trap suggested apologetically that he thought it would be nice if the ball players, (some of whom were making much more than the Congressmen living down the hall) paid the regular hotel rate. All but three of them—and these happened to be Joe Cronin, Moe Berg and Al Schacht—moved out of the joint as indignantly as if they had found a leperess among the chambermaids.

You'd be appalled at the number of otherwise intelligent big leaguers who would no more think of going into a store and buying a suit of clothes, or a hat or a tie, than they'd think of giving a rookie understudy a little helpful advice. A thumping majority of them believe that they should be clothed for free as a bonus for hitting a ball over a fence, though just where the merchant comes in except for some dubious publicity we've never been able to detect.

Expect Cut-Rate Purchases

They expect passes to every other kind of sports event, though they give none for their own. They expect to buy their automobiles at dealer's prices. Only three or four of them have enough pride or interest in the World Series to go to see it, for if they did they would be on their own. They accept the lengthy eulogies of baseball writers as their due, and yell murder if a writer innocently writes one line to the effect that they are bad, when they're bad. If they ever feel an urge to spend a little money in the community that suppors them, they quell it and wait until they get back to the cross-roads.

Of course, they don't have as long an earning period as the inmates of many other professions. But then neither do actors, or fighters, or even reporters. They face, too, the eternal threat of that 10-day clause in their contracts. But a majority of the ones we've known and traveled with were just fundamentally miserly and, like Keltner, always looking for a wholly undeserved handout.

About the Cleveland Club

The only unusual aspect of the Keltner case is that he gave up so early. But he is a comparative rookie in the business and living on the cuff and salting away the money paid to him to live on. An older baseball player, thoroughly immersed in the habit of being a guest of the community, might have entered suit against the government for depriving him of his hard-earned unemployment dole.

Appropriately, the Cleveland Baseball Club more or less endorsed Keltner's action by issuing a statement that he was technically within his rights. The Cleveland baseball fathers would. They're as punchy as a gymnasium, prey as they are to a nest of second-guessing Cleveland baseball writers who keep in shape by running out of town such presumptious upstarts as Roger Peckinpaugh, Walter Johnson and Steve O'Neill who have the brazen gall to think they can manage a ball club as well as they, the writers, can.

Colorado Wins 'Big Seven' Title

Boulder, Colo., Nov. 30 (INS).—Colorado's sophomore eleven copped the Big Seven title today by drubbing Denver, 27 to 17, in a sensational, free scoring football classic. A crowd of 17,500 was in the stands.

Leo Stasica's great passing demonstration, and Harold Saunders' receiving were highlights of the game. Nick Studen and Freddie Powers were offensive powers for the losers.

Some Encouragement For Army-Navy Fans

Philadelphia, Nov. 30 (AP).—At least the 100,000 persons at the Army-Navy game Saturday will not freeze, weather observers predicted today.

But that's the most encouragement they could offer, saying conditions forebode mild, cloudy weather—probably rain.

Tribe May Train At Florida Camp

Cleveland, Nov. 30 (AP). — Vice President C. C. Slapnicka said today the Indians would go to a Florida or Gulf Coast city for spring training.

He said the club virtually had abandoned hopes of going to the Pacific Coast because exhibition game schedules already have been completed with the New York Giants and other teams training in hthe South.

The Indians turned down a $10,000 guarantee to train in the City of Cristobal, Panama Canal Zone. Other bids have been received from Hot Springs, Ark.; San Diego, Calif.; Biloxi, Miss.; Del Ray, Fla., and Sanford, Fla.

Auburn Ties Florida, 7-7, Before 13,000

Tigers' Final Drive Ends on 2-Yard Line as Gun Sounds

By the Associated Press

Auburn, Ala., Nov. 30.—Many of those 13,000 fans who watched the Auburn Tigers dedicate a new stadium today will contend for days to come that the timer's gun robbed the home team of a victory over the plucky 'Gators of Florida.

The game, played beneath dull skies, resulted in a 7 to 7 tie, but an Auburn squad that rose up in power in the closing half was nipped just 2 yards short of the Florida goal by the timer's call and it was only third down.

49-Yard Drive

Florida paraded 49 yards to score and take the lead in the second period as Auburn rolled up plenty of yardage but lacked a goal-line punch. Then the Tigers, with young Dick McGowen spearheading the attack, marched 52 yards to tie the count in the final period.

A deadlock was evident as the end neared, but out of the encroaching darkness came Carl Happer, a halfback, to race spectacularly 48 yards, twisting, squirming, pulling away from tacklers and following fine interference, to go to Florida's 15.

About two minutes were left to play. McGowen ran to Florida's 7, then tipped off for a first down at the 'Gator 4. Auburn was penalized 5 for excessive time. Substitute Bill Nims crashed tackle for 6 and another sub, Geter Cantrell, crashed over to the Florida 2. Before another play could be run the timer called a halt.

Tate Leaves Offensive

Florida's last game offensive was led by Fullback Charlie Tate, who engineered the 'Gators' touchdown, passing and running. Tate crashed across for the score from the Auburn 3 and added the extra point. Auburn's score came on a neatly thrown, floating pass from McGowen to Babe McGehee, a substitute end, over the goal. McGowen kicked the extra point.

In addition to his great play, McGowen attempted two field goals after penetration to Florida's goal line shadows, but both were barely short and a bit wide.

Rutgers Loses First Game in 14 Starts, 13-0

12,000 See Brown Upset Highly Touted New Brunswick Team

By the Associated Press

Providence, R. I., Nov. 30.—Brown salvaged a bit of glory from a disappointing season by subjecting Rutgers' heavier forces to their first defeat in 14 starts by a 13-0 margin this Thanksgiving Day before a crowd of 12,000.

The thrice-beaten Bruins, although outrushing the Scarlets 16 first downs to 7 and and 217 net yards to 50, spent so much time ruining the efforts of the opposition's outstanding threats, Art Gottleib, the passer, and Bill Tranavitch, the runner, that they didn't get around to doing themselves any good until late in the third period.

After a Rutgers' punt rolled to the Bruins' 35-yard line, Bill Sheehan and Charley Blount pointed the way to victory by wiping out 40 yards in six plays, with the result that Brown opened the fourth period on Rutgers' 25.

Only four of Brown's 16 passes were completed and Blount strung two of them together, to Joe Finkelstein and Capt. John McLaughry, to place the ball on the 1-yard line, from where sub-halfback Dick High sliced off tackle for the first touchdown.

High also was responsible for most of the 65-yardage that was required for the second touchdown. He was stopped, however, on the Scarlets' 17, from where Hal Detwiler, another backfield spare, scored. McLaughry failed to convert his first try but made good on his second placement attempt.

Arkansas Defeats Tulsa U. Eleven, 23-0

Kay Eakin's Passes Help Porkers Win On Soggy Field; Crowd of 12,000 Watch Razorbacks Score in First 5 Minutes

By the Associated Press

Tulsa, Okla., Nov. 30.—The Arkansas University Razorbacks, led by shifty-footed and limber-armed Kay Eakin, trounced the University of Tulsa Golden Hurricane, 23-0, today.

Both teams worked hard on aerial attacks despite the dull, hazy day and soggy field. And it was Eakin's flips which worked most consistently and gave the Porkers supremacy.

A crowd of about 12,000 watched Eakin punch off the first touchdown after about five minutes of play in the first period, saw him pitch a pass to Howard Hickey good for another touchdown in the second period, and set up the fourth period touchdown with another flip to Hickey on the Tulsa five.

And besides his passing, Eakin did all the punting for Arkansas, averaging about 43 yards, and carried the ball 14 times for a total gain of 57 yards.

The Porkers completed nine of 23 pass attempts for 152 yards, while Tulsa completed 3 of 16 for 67. On the ground the Porkers had difficulty with the sophomore Tulsa line, but succeeded in getting running plays around the ends.

Arkansas picked up 122 yards on the ground to Tulsa's 47.

Tulsa made its strongest bid of the game in the second period, going to the Arkansas 15 before losing the ball on downs.

Davidson Beaten As Schools End 32-Year Rivalry

By the Associated Press

Charlotte, N. C., Nov. 30.—Saving the worst licking for the last, Wake Forest ended its 32-year old rivalry with Davidson by hanging a 46-7 defeat on the Wildcats here today before a holiday crowd of 10,000 football fans.

Big John Polanski, the Southern Conference's top scorer, went on a 28-point rampage, bagging four touchdowns and four extra points, as the Durable Deacons ran up the biggest score they ever amassed in the 5 games of the bitterly fought series.

Only a 72-yard run from scrimmage by Wilson (Tubby) Hand, 150-pound halfback, in the final quarter, saved Davidson from a shutout.

Red Mayberry, Wake Forest's punting wizard, Fullback Marshall Edwards, and Pat Geer, third-string end, counted the other touchdowns as the Deacons pounded over two touchdowns in the first period, two in the third and three in the last.

Double B, Trained by Former Jockey, Wins Bowie Feature

7-Year-Old Gelding Pays $9.20 to Win

B. Merritt Saddles 1st Winner; Teddy Patic, Zostera Place, Show; Favorite 4th

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

Bowie, Md., Nov. 30.—Former Jockey Bobby Merritt, injured in a spill at Narragansett Park, saddled the first winner of what he hopes will be a successful career as a trainer in the feature race here today. The event, lacking a name, but presenting a shifty field of 11 splinters, went to J. P. McConnell's Double B by four lengths over H. G. Bedwell's Teddy Patic. A length and a half farther back came Mrs. C. W. Williams' Zostera. The badly downed fourth horse was Selmalad, the heavily played favorite.

Trainer Merritt sent a mighty fit 7-year-old gelding to the post in Double B. With Jockey L. Belaski in the saddle the ancient plater, by Son o'Battle and Little Birka, bounced out of the gate on top and never relinquished the lead. Court Dance tried to run with him and tired badly. That was the last real challenge. In the stretch, Double B drew out farther and farther to win easily. Selmalad had some trouble directly after the start, but could do little when clear.

Backers of Double B received $9.20 for each deuce investment and saw their choice run the 6 furlongs in 1:13 1-5 over a fast track. The usual week-day crowd of 7,000 took part in the day's action.

Merritt said today that he may return to the saddle next year if he fails to make the grade as a conditioner.

The sixth race, for all ages, drew eight starters, and they were colts, fillies and geldings of two and three years. Bright View, a consistent miss, which runs for Mrs. H. W. Jackson, disproved the saying about not betting on 2-year-olds to beat older horses. She romped home by three lengths in front of October Ale, the people's choice. Looting Lad was third in the battle over the mile and 70 yards course. The winner paid $8.40 and was well handled by Apprentice Mike Caffarella.

A longshot and an odds-on favorite figured in a $53.40 pay-off in the daily double. Marshall Fields' Blind Impulse, with Jockey Don Meade aboard, took the day's opener in a stretch rush by a pohto. Granicus was second and Interlace third. Blind Impulse paid an individual mutuel of $16.10.

The A. C. C. Stable's Head Hunter proved the best of the cattle gathered for the second race and did so at a $3.60 mutuel. Rosin was second and Cupid's Arrow was third in a limit field of 12.

Dear Al:

Well, our big horse, Dunlad, goes today in the seventh race. He stands out like a lump of coal at midnight. If he can rally the last part of it he may escape being last. From the looks of the spot, I'm beginning to believe that Trainer Bob Cook got the Charles Town and Bowie entry blanks mixed up. You won't have to bet on him but I will, that's the sad part of it. I awakened him to show him the entries and he took one look and went back to sleep. Now all he's got to do to get me shot is to win. Leeds Rielly, secretary of the Charles Town Jockey Club was a visitor yesterday and says that he has a stall ready for Dunlad at the West Virginia track. I had hoped that he would say he had a bag of oats and a bale of hay, but he didn't. Everything is set for Monday's big opening up the way. Jimmy Smith, former jockey for E. R. Bradley and now trainer of the Dixana horses, reports that he will nominate Sirocco for the Kentucky Derby. Too bad that Dunlad will be 6 years old in January. George Perry, the Marlboro Hotel man, now owns Little Mowlee and Momart. They were purchased from Breeder Alan Clarke. Martin Steinforth, internationally known painter, was a visitor. He is in these parts to paint Challedon, W. L. Brann's 1939 champion. Entries for Monday

Capital Leads Fifth District In Building

October Total for 31 Cities Is Highest for Any Month in 11 Years

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Nov. 30.—Building permits issued in 31 cities of the Fifth Federal Reserve District during October totaled $14,032,486 and exceeded in value those of any month since November, 1928.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, which reported other industrial gains that continued the trend begun in September, said the building permits issued in the first ten months of 1939 amounted to $105,269,094, an increase of 43 per cent over the same portion of last year. In October last year the 31 cities' total was $8,383,620.

Washington, with $8,499,995, was the October, 1939, leader, followed by Baltimore with $2,479,440, Richmond with $295,708, Charlotte with $289,145 and Norfolk with $217,131.

Because of "unseasonally mild" weather in October, the bank reported department store sales showed less than a normal rise over high September sales, although they exceeded those in October last year by four per cent.

New Cars Gain

Retail and wholesale trade also ran ahead of last year and introduction of new model automobiles sent new car registration figures in October 39 per cent higher than September and 78 per cent above October, 1938.

Cotton textile mills consumed more cotton—320,999 bales—than during any other October on record; bituminous coal mines increased "production notably;" tobacco manufacturing was larger than in September or October, 1938, and rayon mills worked full time which still wasn't enough to keep their stocks of yarn from being further reduced.

Employment made further gains, although at a slower rate than in September, while payrolls advanced more than employment, partly because of the change on October 24 from a 25 to a 30 cents an hour minimum base pay under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Stock Prices Fall to New Low Level; Trading Volume Rises to 883,840 Shares; Scandinavian Bonds Drop Sharply

New York, Nov. 30.—The stock market fell away again today, carrying it to the lowest level of the current move, with the composite average off 0.43 point. Trading was slightly more active, amounting to 883,840 shares. Bonds were featured by the breaks in obligations of all the Nordic countries. Finland's 6s, traded at 83½ on Wednesday, were offered at 59½, off 24 points, and issues of Norway, Denmark and the cities of Helsingfors and Copenhagen melted away 1 to 11 points with few bids making their appearance.

Reports, which were unconfirmed, but persisted in the street, that the Administration would act through one of its agencies or the Federal Reserve to taper the liquidation of American securities now being pressed on this market by Finland and France, by loaning money to the belligerents with such securities as the collateral, did not affect the trend of prices. Should such a scheme be worked out, it would help rally the list from its present long, irregular decline, but at the moment it is nothing more than a rumor.

Foreign liquidation has been carried out carefully, in violent contrast with what happened on the outbreak of the World War in 1914, but it has been persistent liquidation with no foreign buying as an offset. And, as this selling has come in, it has been apparent that this market is not the active affair of the late 1920's. It can't stand too much pressure on the selling side.

Reaction to Soviet Foray

The Russian invasion of Finland produced a wave of revulsion in the financial district, where no name is more honored than that of the small Nordic power. Business cannot be conducted unless there is mutual trust between individuals and nations, and in no area is this more appreciated than that in Wall Street. Consequently it is a sad commentary on the affairs of the world to see the bonds of a nation which honors its word offered for sale at less than 60 cents on the dollar, with no takers.

Not even the United States has the record for honoring its obligations as has Finland, for we defaulted for a time on an annuity due Panama. With Finland there has never been any question. But its bonds broke wide open because, in the words of Russia's premier and Foreign Commissar Molotoff, Finland's hostility "has become unbearable, and the Soviet government can no longer stand it."

Just how the Soviet, which is regarded by too many fellow travellers in our own Administration and outside of it to have all the answers and to be a modern Utopia, can excuse this march of murder is difficult to imagine. Finland's population compared with that of Russia's is the same as Brooklyn's compared with that of the United States, and Finland's area compared with that of Russia is the same as Alabama's compared with that of the United States. Those in this country and in the Administration who would have this country follow the teachings of Marx and become another Russia had better get busy with some explanations, and the above by Molotoff won't do.

Commodities Strong

This turn of events in the foreign war weighed like a pall over the financial district and there was little attention paid to our own domestic indices of business. The carloading report, covering the week ended last Saturday, showed a decrease of 12.3 per cent compared with the previous week. The holiday in some States today also is expected to affect this and other indices.

Heavy engineering construction awards for the week were off 16 per cent from a year ago.

In the field of commodities today, cotton futures went to their highest for the current movement following strength abroad. The close was up 5 to 6 points. Wheat jumped 1 to 2 cents a bushel, aided by the more serious turn of events in the war. The price is the highest in nearly two years.

Listed bonds moved lower on the European war developments today, with Finland and Scandinavian issues extremely hard hit. There were no buyers for Finland 6s, which were offered successively down from the previous close of 83½ to 59½, without sales. Helsingfors 6½s dropped 11 points on sales of four bonds, and then also went begging. Danish and Norwegian bonds fell 3 to 7 points, some issues touching the lows recorded soon after Germany started after Poland.

Bond Market Indeterminate

There was little business in any department of the bond market, for everyone preferred to sit tight while awaiting clarification of Russian intentions. German bonds reflected mincing inquiry, while Australian and Canadian issues drifted slightly lower. Belgian and Italian bonds were idle. Among the Latin-American default bonds some inquiry developed for Colombians, owing to the Washington conferences on the debts of that country. Others were quiet and lower. Turnover in all listed issues was $5,870,000.

United States Treasury securities dipped sharply early in the day, as they usually do when international tension rises. Nor was there much rallying power later, and closings represented declines from 1-32 to 14-32 of a point. The guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations also dipped. Best grade utility, railroad and industrial bonds were marked small fractions lower.

Among speculative railroad bonds fractional recessions were the rule, with a number of issues off 1 to 2 points. Holding company and share-privilege bonds suffered because of the decline in related equities. Local traction issues were marked down with the rest, and similar conditions prevailed in communications, amusement and other special groups.

Holiday Cuts Bank Clearings In Past Week

But Total for 22 Cities Is 5.1 Per Cent Above Same Week Last Year

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 30.—Bank clearings during the latest period fell about 15 per cent below the volume for the preceding week, due largely to the widespread observance of the Thanksgiving Day holiday. The aggregate, however, exceeded that for the corresponding 1938 week, which also included the holiday, and marked the fourth consecutive year-to-year advance.

Total exchange for 22 leading cities for the week ended Wednesday, November 29, amounted to $4,688,970,000, according to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. This represented an increase of 5.1 per cent above the $4,463,501,000 for the same week last year.

The turnover for the current week was $884,632,000 less than that for the week preceding. Between the two similar weeks of 1933 the decline equaled $987,245,000.

New York transactions were again smaller than last year, the total of $2,638,975,000 contrasting with $2,686,427,000, a decrease of 1.8

Jail Body Asks Permanent Road Camps

Va. Board Also Urges Enlargement of Penitentiary

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Nov. 30.—The State prison board, in its annual report to Gov. Price today, recommended enlargement of the State penitentiary to care for 950 felons, establishment of permanent road camps to accommodate 2,000 felons, and immediate development of a cotton farm for youthful and first offense felons and misdemeanants.

The report outlined a proposed permanent program for the State prison system to take care in some part of the "rapid and continuous increase in the number and variety of prisoners over the past 15-year period."

The present cell building at the penitentiary at Richmond has 336 cells. Two prisoners occupy each of 175 cells and three prisoners occupy each of 160 cells. The population of the penitentiary as of November 1 was 1,074.

Recommendations by the board provide for a new cell building with maximum safety unit, for 550 inmates.

Thirty-one semi-permanent road camps now in operation would be replaced by 25 permanent camps to care for 2,000 persons, under the recommendations of the board, which said it expected this change to be gradual.

Expansion of the State industrial farm for women was another recommendation.

In regard to administrative matters the board indorsed centralization of control and recommended that direction of the prison system be placed in charge of one man.

Work Still Man's Salvation, Says Dr. Osborn at 90

Camera study of Dr. Albert Osborne

American U. Historian Recalls Some Personal History on His Birthday; His Advice to Youth: Be Thorough

Dr. Albert Osborn, author and historian of American University, who turns 90 tomorrow, doesn't stay at home now leaning on his memories.

His recollections, reflected briefly in his talk yesterday, seemed more like ingredients he uses to make comparisons on present-day goings-on—just things his values are shaped against.

His values are very rugged and very plainly spoken at his house out in Washington Grove, Md. This silver spoon in the mouth attitude disturbs him and makes his eyes, still very good, narrow and almost blaze above the snow of his well-clipped beard.

The question asked him was this: What would he tell any young fellow who came to him, a man of 90, asking advice on how best to get along. Dr. Osborn had no snap answer. In fact, he previously had said that a man should be thorough in everything. So his answer came slowly, from eyes and mouth, alike.

"The old statement that man shall live by the sweat of his brow still holds good today," he said. The answer left his mouth clamped hard. It opened again, with decision:

"To create a permanent part of our population looking to be fed with a spoon is a serious problem. I think about it very often."

But his thoughts weren't entirely there. Cornell had a winning football team this season, and Dr. Osborn, who was graduated in the university's first class, 1872, clung to the scores. He even brought out a poem he had written to his Alma Mater and did some talking about Coach Snavely's tactics.

Just once did the words "stage coach" occur in his conversation and that was just to say he recalled them in his nat've New York State and to use those long-gone years in balancing off a view about present-day people.

He touched only a little on his former years. He had helped found American University; founded Washington Grove Methodist Church 29 years ago, and served 12 years as its pastor. But this was not to catalogue his milestones.

"Keep busy at something worth while," he was leading up to. "I am still doing that."

500,000 Barrels Of U. S. Gasoline Bought by Russia

Russia has received from the United States since September 1 more than 500,000 barrels of gasoline and this may be the fuel used in the planes now carrying on bombing operations over Finnish territory.

The fact that for many months before September no gasoline was exported to Russia is taken in some quarters as substantiation of reports that Russian gasoline production is now at a low ebb, the result being that when Russia began planning her Baltic operations she found herself short of motor fuels and turned to the United States.

Statistics compiled in the fuels division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce covering the period September 1 to October 31, fix the total gasoline shipments to Russia in that period at 566,645 barrels. If the November data was available the total would probably exceed 700,000 barrels.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

A slam hand which resulted unfortunately for contributors is discussed today. A more practiced declarer would have made his bid. He tried for an end play instead of a squeeze, and the alert defense of the wife of the contributor defeated him. Here are the cards and the bidding, with both sides vulnerable. South dealer at match-point duplicate:

	♠ 6 ♡ A 10 8 4 ◇ A K J 6 3 2 ♣ 4 3
♠ K 9 5 4 ♡ 6 3 2 ◇ 10 9 8 7 ♣ J 2	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH	♠ Q J 10 7 ♡ Q J 7 5 ◇ 4 ♣ Q 10 6 5
	♠ A 8 3 2 ♡ K 9 ◇ Q 5 ♣ A K 9 8 7

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
2 NT.	Pass	4 ◇	Pass
5 ♣	Pass	5 NT.	Pass
6 NT.	Pass	Pass	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 4 ♠

Contributor B. S. writes:

"I know that you like to extol the good deeds of women players, and Georgie is the heroine of this one.

"The double of six no trump would be bad in rubber bridge, but is defensible in this game, particularly as it does not disclose the position of high cards, but stops in three suits.

"A low spade was opened, and the ten forced the ace. The diamonds were then run, and Georgie discarded a heart, a club and all her spades. The declarer, meanwhile parted with his three spades and a club. Then ten of hearts was led from the board, and now comes the necessity for thought. The temptation is to split the honors, but Georgie refused the clever bait and played low.

"If the honors are split, the king catches one of them; the ace and king of clubs are cashed, and she is thrown in with a low club to lead into the heart tenace on the board.

"Pretty smart thinking, I call it, on both their parts, as well as good card counting by Georgie to realize that declarer can have only two hearts."

But declarer can make the contract by a simple squeeze if he lets the first spade trick hold. He wins the next lead, cashes the king of hearts and king of clubs, runs diamonds and East is caught in the pincers. She will have to part with her protection in either hearts or clubs, giving declarer the twelfth trick with the ten of hearts or the club nine.

Listen! with Slocum

At a recent fairly public gathering ye author took quite an ear lathering from faithful WJSV clients who were particularly intrigued by the CBS European coverage. What sort of mortals were Ed Murrow, William L. Shirer and Thomas Grandin? How could they keep going day in and day out, broadcasting at weird morning, afternoon and evening hours from London, Berlin and Paris?

ED MURROW

We'll take Murrow first, because he's the boss of the CBS European division and the veteran. Murrow is in his middle thirties, as debonair as Menjou and looking just enough like Robert Taylor to be pleasant, but not offensive. He was doing quite well at CBS's New York headquarters as Director of Talks when he was suddenly taken down with an incurable case of ennui. He was sent abroad about three years ago and his recent despatches to this country point out rather strongly that his ennui has completely disappeared under Herr Hitler's tender ministrations.

Shirer is a partially bald, plumpish little man. He bounced all over Europe for CBS for a full year and finally settled down in Geneva to catch up on his sleep and establish a normal home. That was about one month before Mr. Hitler and Mr. Chamberlain had their first get together. Poor Mr. Shirer hasn't seen Geneva since. Shirer likes the European food and leisurely manner, which puts him in a rather unhappy spot these days because he's in Berlin where there is no leisure and less food.

Grandin is another youthful American. As thin as Murrow and smaller even than Shirer, he came to Paris as a Rockefeller Foundation student and remained as Columbia's correspondent.

In closing it might be nice to point out that all three at this moment have a deep yen for a good look at the Statue of Liberty.

Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield

Chapter 69

THEY WERE silent. A tapping of hammers began at the back of the house. Canby let down the front legs of his chair to the floor, leaned across the table, and asked seriously, "Say, Uncle Tim, I wish you'd tell me whether you honest-to-goodness think we're on the right track with this funny business I've cooked up. It's darned different from what most folks seem to want. This is the third house Susan's kept house in, in less than a year—shavings in the soup and no floors to half the rooms. It's kind of a funny way to live, isn't it—for Susan?"

"I love it! I simply love it!" cried Susan. "Things have stayed so put around me all my life, I just adore having them on the move, I know how jailed up you feel living in one of those old stone houses you can't make the littlest change in. It's simply swell to have an idea and say, 'Why don't you put a window over there?'"

Canby looked at her dubiously. She went on defending him against his own doubt, "Why, everybody knows that it's not living in a place you've fixed up—it's fixing it up that's the fun!"

Canby turned as if to get Timothy's opinion, but she still had more to say. "It's kind of wonderful, honestly it is, Uncle Tim, to take off everything from these nice old houses that's worn out with the weather they've stood so far, and find the framework that really holds them up is all sound and strong—really stronger, Canby says, because it's so seasoned and old—and then put around the same old joists and beams and rooftrees whatever they need for another hundred years of living. It makes a person feel—well, good! And the flowerbeds that look as though everything in them was dead and buried forever, and yet snowdrops and bleeding heart and things trying to come up every spring through the trash." She had not yet lured Canby out of his self-questioning. She tried again, "And don't you think Canby's idea of bringing in nice educated people to these little old back towns is nice? I often think, 'Now if only somebody had done this for the Crandall Pitch settlement before it was too late!'"

ᔓᔕ

"OH, JUST YOU wait, I'm going to do over the Crandall Pitch," cried Canby, "to the Queen's taste! As soon as I get a little more capital I'm going to buy that land off of you, Uncle Tim, and put a house back on every one of those empty cellar holes. Nice houses—cute, you know, low ceilings story-and-a-half, like the old ones. Only with plumbing. That's a slick place for a settlement of summer houses, do you know it? Finest view in Windward County. And dandy water. And that road up will be O. K. for cars with modern brakes. And if it's not, with a little blasting we could give it a wider swing around the corners, instead of picking out the gosh-darnedest grades the way our hardy ancestors did."

"Well, Mr. Dewey will be pleased with that news," said Timothy.

But Canby remembered now that his question had not been answered. He looked at Timothy appealingly. "All the same . . ." he murmured, "all the same! There are times when camping out is not so hot!"

Timothy understood that a young man was saying wordlessly to an older, "You're of my father's generation—you've been a man longer than I have. Help me to know what a man's responsibilities are."

To himself Timothy said, "Let yourself go! Don't stiffen up!" To Canby and Susan he spoke easily, naturally, his mind with all its facets, his heart and body one in unity as they seldom were, "See here—I have an idea. What you young people need is one permanent place to go back to between campings-out—a place to keep your winter clothes in summer and your summer clothes in winter. Well, I hardly ever use that old house I bought up on the Crandall Pitch road. Why don't you go there for your between-times living? It just stands empty. You might as well as not. How about it?"

THEY GAZED at him, their faces blank, their eyes wide, as they explored in imagination the possibilities of this plan and then Canby cried, bringing his fist down on the table, "Well, may I be damned if that's not—I beg your pardon, Susan—the very way to turn the trick. Who! Uncle Tim, that's one swell idea! Susan can go there when she comes out from the hospital in May, and have the nurse with her for a while. Good grief! Does that take a load from my mind! I don't see how we were going to manage that. Maybe you can see a trained nurse with her cap and her uniform trying to take care of a new baby with a house being built over her head, but I can't. Oh, boy! You've got it! That's the answer! Uncle Tim, you're swell!"

Susan leaned across the table and for an instant took Timothy's hand silently in hers with a long beautiful look of gratitude, the deep look that came from her heart. She was thanking him for providing a home for Canby's child. She smiled, she dropped his hand, she looked at Canby happily. So strange a turmoil shook Timothy to dizziness that he closed his eyes as if he were falling, and clenched his hands hard on the arms of his chair. He could not have said for his life what he was feeling.

But it passed. It passed slowly as Canby began to talk dates and material details. Was there firewood enough in the woodshed up there for the cold nights and mornings of late May, high on the slope of the mountain? Should the double windows be taken off or left on? Oh, he'd get up and fix that one that the wind broke in. And say, boy! When he got around to building the houses back on the Crandall Pitch, and they were staying right along in the stone house, why couldn't he just run up a wing to it—one story with two three rooms—it would hardly cost a thing—what with the left-overs of material from other jobs. We'll have it the old family home yet.

Susan murmured dreamily, "It is my old family home," but she was paying little attention to what the men were saying. She soon forgot them altogether, leaning her elbows on the table, her head on one hand, looking down at nothing, a faint smile curving her wide tender mouth. The light was reflected up from the white cloth into her face, blurring its lines in a shadowless, Correggio-like softness.

WHEN TIMOTHY went away, Canby walked out to the car with him. They shook hands, still talking prose about a broken grate in the kitchen stove at the Crandall Pitch house. Timothy got in, loosened the brake, turned on the switch. But Canby put his great hand—roughened, broadened, hardened—on the door as though he had one more thing to say. Timothy waited for him to speak but from his inward-turning gaze he seemed to be reflecting. Presently, looking with affection at Timothy, "Uncle Tim, I wonder if you take in how much Susan thinks of you? She really loves you—know what I mean? It isn't just that she admires you like everything and wants to live up to your ideas the way lots of academy students do. It's the way folks love their own folks—when they've got any. Honest she does. I can't get over it."

Timothy turned his own eyes deeply inward, thought for a moment, said in his harsh, strong voice, "Well, Canby, when you've lived as long as I, one of the things you find out is that there are all kinds of ways to love. A person has to find that out for himself. Nobody ever lets on that it's so. But it is."

Canby swallowed, looked down at his hard, young, powerful hand, looked up again. "And all the time I was a kid growing up I thought there wasn't—not really—even one way," he said in wonder. He took his hand away, Timothy let in his clutch, shifted gears and drove on.

ᔓᔕ

WORKING steadily down through the pile of letters on his desk—bills, requests for help from old students, wedding invitations, complaints from parents, notes from college deans, questions from teachers in district schools, bank statements, estimates—Timothy came on an envelope sprawlingly addressed to him in pencil. It was from Canby, scribbled in the Ashley Hospital, to tell him that the baby was there O. K.—a boy—that Susan was O. K. too—that the boy was to be named Timothy Hume Hunter, if Uncle Tim did not object.

No 1 in Hulme—after all these years! Timothy took off his glasses to laugh. Oh, well, let it go, that superfluous letter from the past. It had been silly to try to hold on to it. He was an American, wasn't he?

He sat trying to think what it would be like to have a child named for him. But he could not imagine it. He had had no experience with little children and could not conceive that a new baby meant a new human being. He could not even, try as he might, conceive the idea of a baby as anything real. The only thing that was real was Canby's misspelled letter with its news of what he meant—Timothy grasped that idea clearly enough—as a great proof of affection. Traditionally it was. Well, it really was. He must be sure, he impressed it responsibly on his mind, to remember to show Susan and Canby that he appreciated it. He lifted his hand to put his glasses back on, and did not take it down for an instant, sitting very still, feeling, far within, another shift of inner ballast, as if to equalize some undefined change of wind or current.

BUT WHEN after Susan's return from the hospital, he first went up to the stone house that had been his and was not now, and first saw his namesake in the flesh, he realized that he need give himself no concern about anything he was to say or do. Susan would not notice. She could hear, she could see, nothing but the roll of pink blanket in the small basket set on the long bench under the maple trees.

She could not even look at Timothy as they sat talking at the other end of the bench. She answered what he said as if she heard it, yes, but in the even low tone of a person walking in her sleep. Yet she had something to tell him, she said, her eyes never quitting the downy head on the tiny pillow, the radiance of her paled thinned face turned away from Timothy.

What she had to say was, a little breathlessly, that they had decided to have the baby christened, not just named. In church. Down in St. Andrew's where she had been christened. She thought it would be nice.

"Yes, that will be nice."

"I thought it would please Father Kirby," she said in explanation.

"Yes, it will please him."

Susan looked at him now for a moment. "Canby says he doesn't mind," she reassured him. "Isn't that sweet of him?"

"Yes, that's good of Canby," Timothy did not say this ironically. He, too, was sinking into this windless still dream of new sunshine, new leaves, new life.

Susan bent over the basket, closely gazing. There was a silence. Then, "Uncle Tim, wouldn't you like to hold him a minute?" she asked.

Timothy did not say what he thought, "No, I really wouldn't at all, Susan," because she had already slipped her arm under the tiny bundle and lifted it out. Her eyes fixed on the bland sleeping face so steadily that her gaze was like an organic union with the child, she held him toward Timothy who, putting down the slight physical distaste of his age and sex for very small babies, accepted the offered, blanket-wrapped roll.

"There" . . . breathed Susan in a dove's murmur, settling the bundle in Timothy's arms. "There . . ." She took away her hand.

Timothy felt that the blanket which had weighed nothing—as though it were filled with thistle-down fluff—had something in it, something palpable, with weight, with warmth. The soundly sleeping baby did not stir, lay quiet as a little stone. But what was in Timothy's arms was no stone. It was life. He was astonished to the limit of astonishment and beyond, to feel from that motionless, scarcely breathing scrap of flesh and blood a flooding emanation of life—as from the sun.

SUSAN STRETCHED out her arms jealously and took back her baby. "How does it make you feel?" she asked playfully, bending her head to keep unbroken that hypnotically steady gaze on her son's face.

"Well, it made me feel something," admitted Timothy.

She did not hear him. Standing with the baby in her arms, she fell into a long, brooding silence. Then, dreamily, "You can't think how nice it is to be back in the stone house," she told him. "It seems so safe for the baby."

"Yes, it is safe," agreed Timothy.

A woman in a white uniform came to the door of the house and said professionally, "All ready, Mrs. Hunter." Susan turned her head, nodded, put the baby back in the basket and said to Timothy, "You won't mind staying here with him. The nurse wants me for a minute or two." She did not wait for his consent; she stooped low over the basket, put her cheek against the round blooming one within and was gone.

TIMOTHY SAT on the bench under the maples to wait—the bench he himself had put there, under his own maples. His no longer. He had thought to sit there in joy with Susan. He sat there alone in sadness. Was it sadness? He had thought to sit there in rags, broken, in the frustration which is the inevitable end of all human effort. What is frustration?

He looked at the basket at the other end of the bench, and from the confused tangle in his mind picked out an ironic thought: "So this was the goal—all the time—to which I was driving. To be a grandfather!" He laughed aloud once, his loud, harsh, single bark. Susan leaned from a window to call, "What's the joke?"

"Nothing," he waved it off with a gesture of his hand. "Nothing."

But Susan had remembered something she had meant to say, something that could not wait. She came out to where Timothy sat—walking light-footed across the grass, slim as a girl again. But no girl. She said, "Uncle Tim, do you remember the day when you told me about your mother — about her dying — about how you missed her? It was—why, it was right here, wasn't it—don't you remember?—the day we were going up across the hill pasture to . . ."
